"James Isbell Armstrong, as president of the Board of Trustees, I designate you the new president of Middlebury College."
—Egbert C. Hadley

The Inauguration of James Isbell Armstrong

". . . By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Board of Trustees, I now declare you, James Isbell Armstrong, the twelfth president of Middlebury College and charge you with all the responsibilities appertaining thereto. May the days to come be prosperous for you and this college." . . . with these words by Egbert C. Hadley, president of the Board of Trustees, Dr. James I. Armstrong was inaugurated as president of the College in tradition-rich ceremonies held at the Memorial Field House on Friday morning, November 8th.

The induction of President Armstrong opened with Mr. Hadley stating: "James Isbell Armstrong, as president of the Board of Trustees, I designate you the new president of Middlebury College." Then turning to Dr. Stratton, Mr. Hadley continued, "Samuel Somerville Stratton, on behalf of the Board of Trustees, I salute you for the worthy manner in which you have filled the office of the Presidency. For two decades you have administered the affairs of the College capably and devotedly. We congratulate you and say, 'well done.' And now I request that you commit to the president designate the symbol of office entrusted to your care in 1943."

Dr. Stratton moved to the center of the platform and said: "James Isbell Armstrong, you have been called to this office for which you are admirably equipped by nature, training, intellect, and tempera-

act. The danger is, it seems to me, that they should ever mistake this role and try to be other than they have proclaimed themselves."

Dr. Armstrong's first official duty as president of the College was the conferring of an honorary degree of Doctor of Civil Law on Dr. Robert F. Goheen, president of Princeton University. Dr. Goheen's citation read: "Your contribution to higher education has already been recognized by many distinguished institutions of learning. As a teacher and as an administrator you have been deeply committed to the values of the liberal arts and the liberal sciences and have nurtured Woodrow Wilson's view that the liberal arts are a power and not an ornament. You have been a speaker of words and a doer of deeds in the academic and the non-academic worlds. Ever aiming to master yourself in the service of others, you have always risen to that high call of duty—non ministrari sed ministrare. It is not then so much for your many achievements as for the quality of your life in the service of men that today we honor you."

With the Benediction by Rev. Charles P. Scott, College Chaplain, the inauguration of the twelfth president of the College was concluded with fitting pomp and pageantry. Dr. Armstrong and Dr. Goheen led the platform party of College trustees and officers from the stage. They were followed out of the Field House by the colorful academic procession of representatives of universities, colleges and learned societies, by the faculty of the College, and by representatives of the community and the State of Vermont.

ment. You are offered the challenge of leading those who in teaching and working at Middlebury College devote themselves to the end that those who study here may grow in character, intelligence, and grace. May you maintain and strengthen the high standards of this college; and may you foster the ideals that have been developing here for over a century and a half."

Removing the medallion from his shoulders and holding it up, Dr. Stratton continued: "On behalf of the Board of Trustees, I shall invest you with this medallion as a symbol of the trust placed in you and of the burden placed upon you." With these words Dr. Stratton hung the symbol of office from Dr. Armstrong's shoulders.

Mr. Hadley then declared Dr. Armstrong the twelfth president of the College.

President Armstrong stood alone in the crisscross of TV spotlights at the rostrum as he waited for the applause from the capacity audience to subside. He then spoke: "I thank the Board for this expression of its confidence and accept this trust. With God's help and the aid of those who share the task, I shall execute to the best of my ability in the service of the College."

For the next 30 minutes Dr. Armstrong delivered his inaugural address.

"What concerns me as I take up my new responsibilities at Middlebury College is the rightness and relevance of the liberal arts and liberal sciences in the modern world," he said. "What is at stake here at Middlebury is the importance and relevance of the liberal arts and liberal sciences—here and now—in this space-atomic-computer-satellite age. . . .

"In this age of massive contrasts and complexities it seems to me that the way of the liberal arts and liberal sciences is a way of incalculable value for our young men and women—in a way to sensitize their values for living."

Dr. Armstrong is concerned with helping to guide the College past the perils of distraction or possible destruction. He noted that these dangers assume many disguises and pointed out some of the major ones.

"My first concern is for the faculties of liberal arts colleges. Unless the College looks first to its faculty as the mainspring of its action, realizing that the quality of the faculty determines to an overwhelming degree the quality of the liberal arts program, the prophets of doom will prove to be right, though none now may believe them when enrollments are rising and the desire for an A.B. degree consumes the land."

President Armstrong pointed out that although the teacher may be regarded as dangerous if he disregards the norms, he must be supported, not just tolerated, as long as his goal is the pursuit of truth.

He explained as the second danger the voice of specialization and pre-professionalism being heard more and more strongly in the land. He said this should not be deplored or skirted, but met by stretching every means to keep the liberal arts truly liberal while recognizing that colleges in the country must prepare young men and women for graduate and professional schools.

"And finally," commented Dr. Armstrong, "there is the insidious and ever-threatening peril that in our enthusiasm for finding solutions and in developing theory we will lose sight of the individual as we program and pattern education. . . . We must never forget that liberal arts colleges are primarily concerned with the person who knows—with the individual—not knowledge for its own sake. . . The colleges of the liberal arts and sciences must raise up men and women who think and 5th is Guy Fawkes Day marking the discovering of a conspiracy, but as you are aware, the word conspire from its roots (cum and spirare) also means to breathe or work in harmony. In that sense, this occasion so near November 5th is an anniversary of a happier New England plot—the bringing into being of a harmonious and cooperative venture in higher education in the early days of our nation.

But there is another interesting thing about that date 163 years ago. The number 163 is not exactly divisible by any digit, and this fact can properly remind us that the history of a college is not readily divisible—that the events of this day mark not a break with the past, nor a radical turning, but an important stage in a progressive continuum. Nor is the idea of a liberal education, to which Middlebury has effectively devoted her efforts over the years, so much a matter of discreet parts as it is a single, high aspiration resting on a common commitment to the life of the mind and the spirit. Finally, like the number 163, the nature of a man is not really divisible, but is rather best viewed as an entity and wholeness. And it is of the wholeness and the integrity of James I. Armstrong that I wish to speak for a few moments this morning.

Walter Pater, writing of style, stressed "mind and heart." Need I tell you that your new president has been endowed with an overflowing measure of both? I have known him as a fellow- student, -teacher, -scholar, and colleague in university administration; and I can testify to the ruggedness and at the same time to the comprehensiveness and penetration of his thinking.

And I can speak with equal conviction of Jim Armstrong's heart, for he has been my friend since we were boys together.

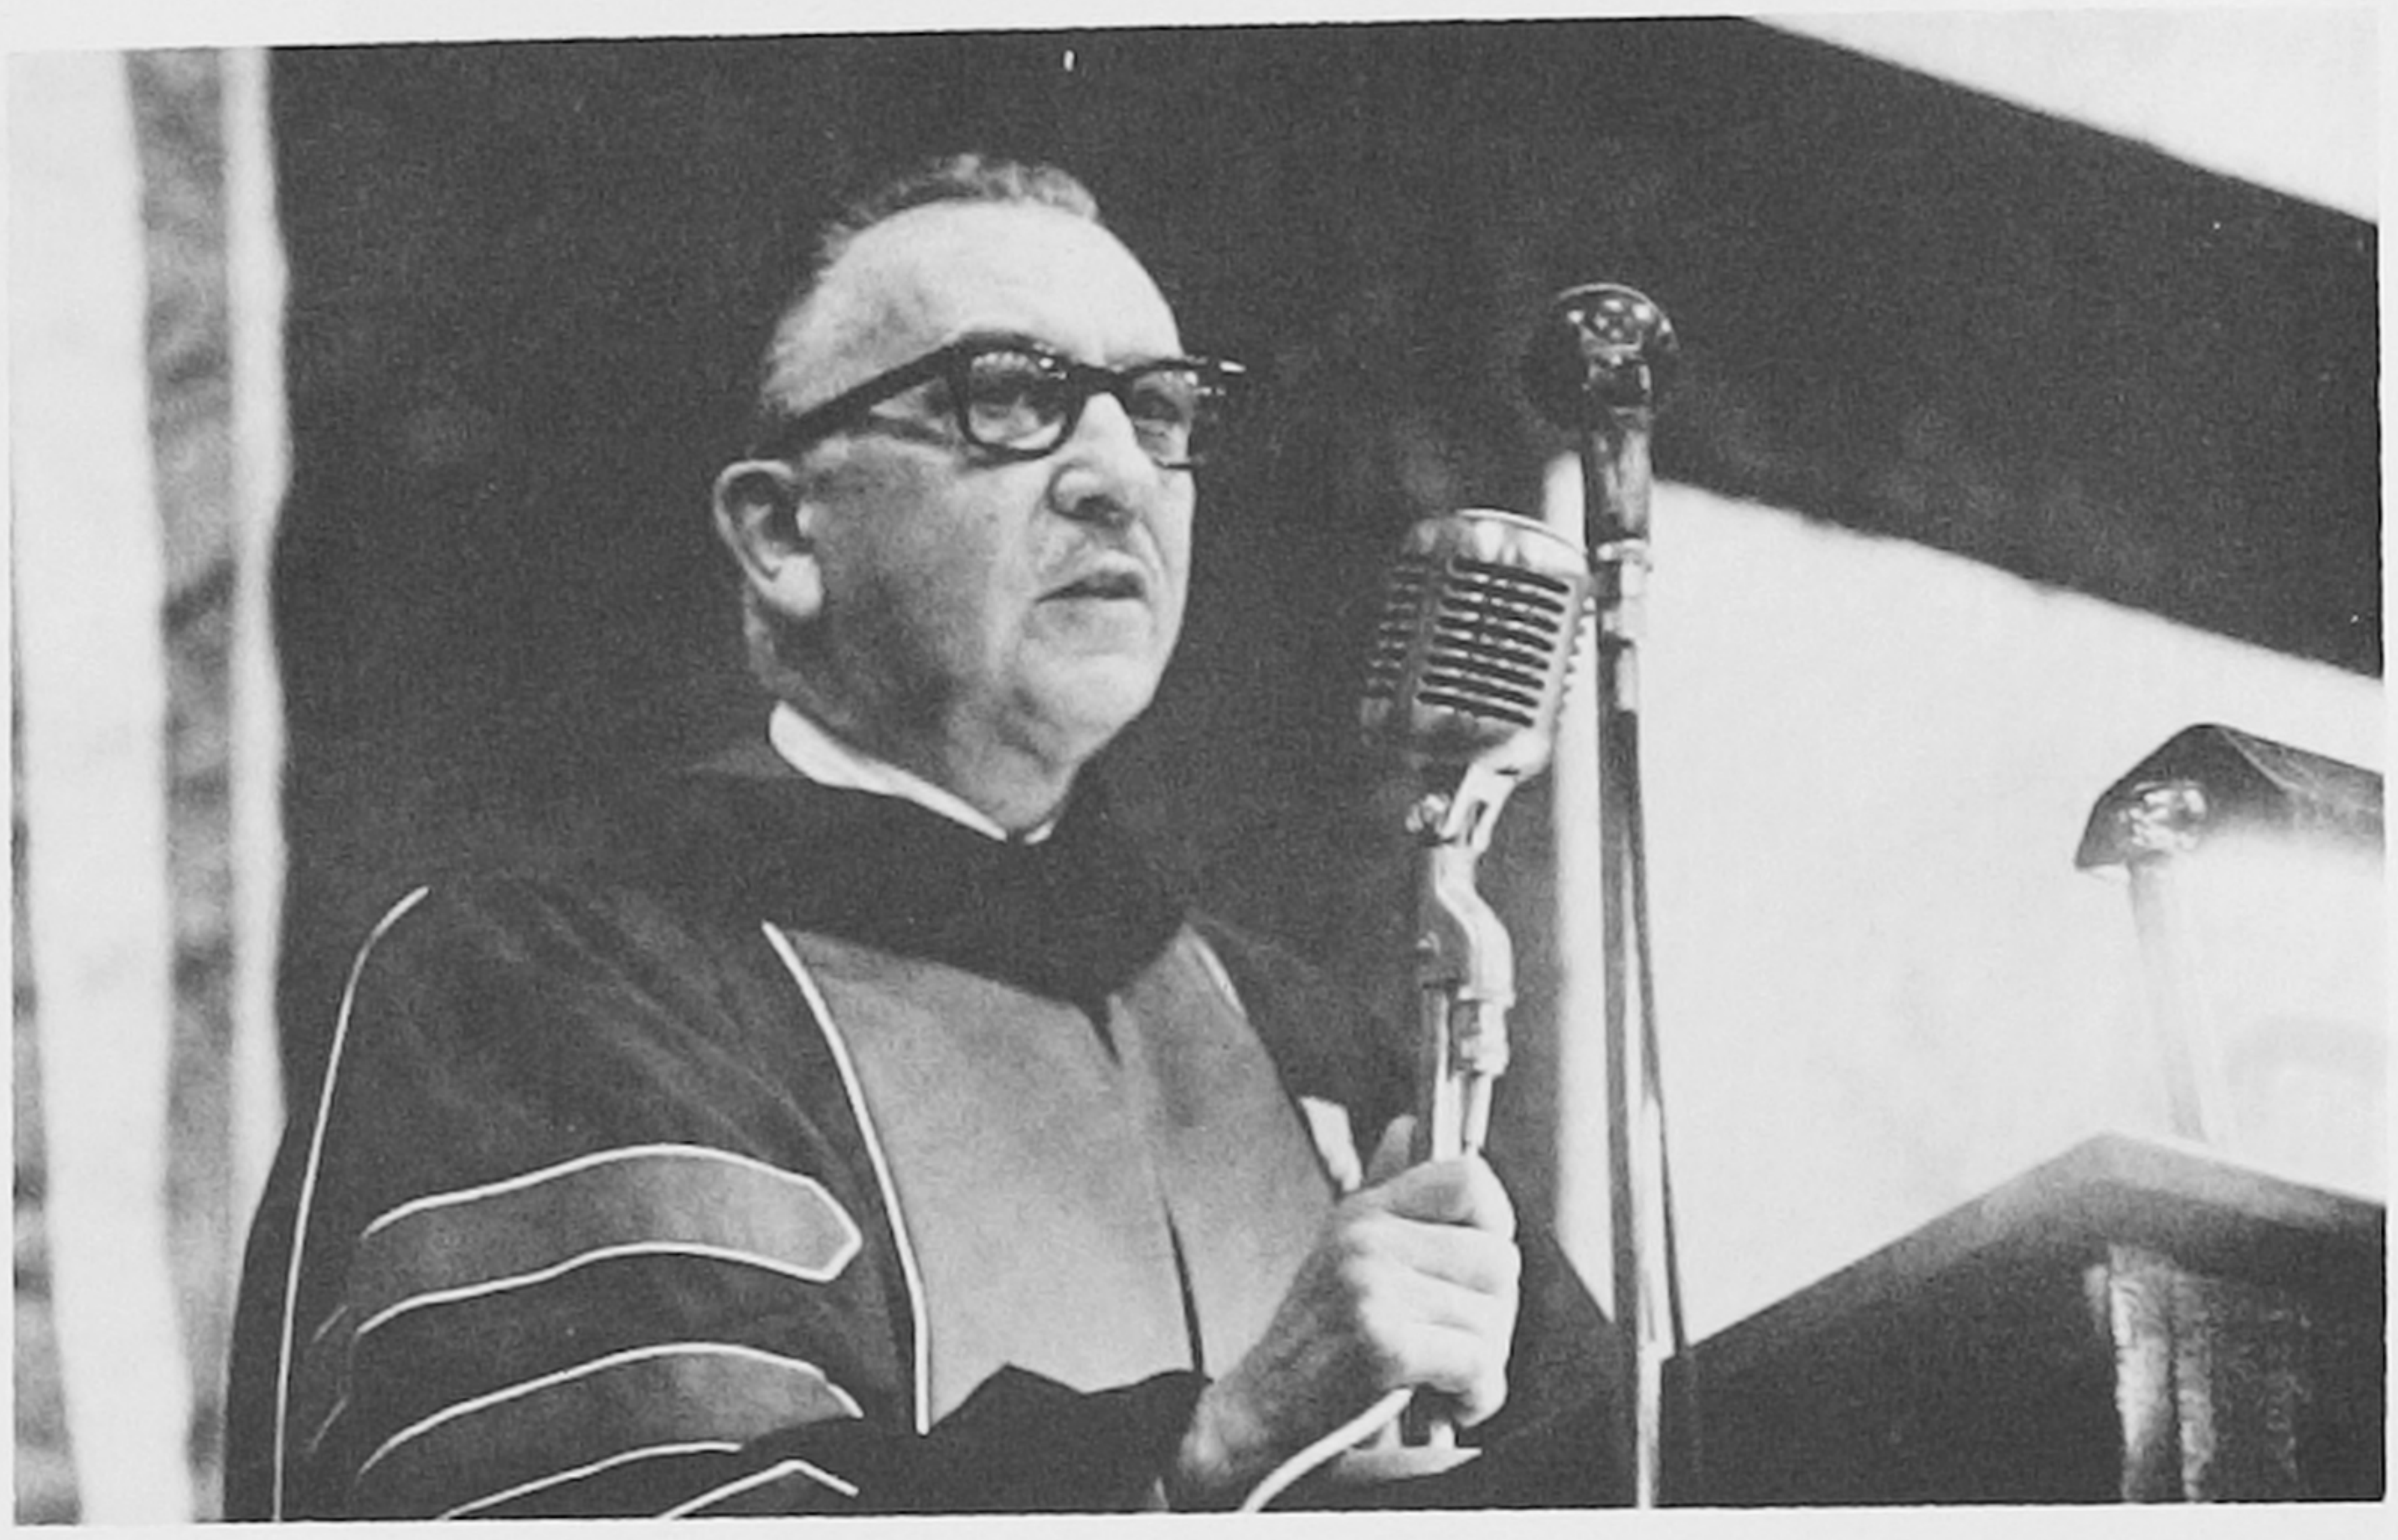
Most of us as we move about on our daily rounds find, I am sure, that there are encounters we would as soon avoid—not because of hostility or malice but simply because some people seem to be perennially self-preoccupied, or cantankerous, or just plain dull. There are others one is always glad to see, for they bring with them something that warms and delights. To us in Princeton, Jim Armstrong is such a man. His ready, firm friendliness unfailingly brightens up the surroundings.

Nevertheless, it is a hard task to which you have called him. (And here I think I can speak with a little more personal authority than the young bachelor minister who ventured to speak to the ladies' guild of his parish on the responsibilities of marriage. When he had finished, one of his listeners is reported to have muttered: "I wish I knew as little about it as he does.") You can take comfort, however, in knowing that James Armstrong is a man of old Presbyterian stock, with great independence of judgment, and perhaps that is especially appropriate in the State of Vermont, whose early citizens, I understand, not only declared their independence from Britain but also from New Hampshire.

It is often said that a college or university presidency is an impossible job—that no man can at once be educational leader, balancer of the budget, passer of the hat, landscape architect, public relations expert, wise guardian of student welfare, skilled tea-drinker, and the many other things he is expected to be. I confess that from now fairly long and almost constantly harried experience, I find this judgement to be just. Therefore I bespeak your compassion and forbearance toward your new president, for he has about as much downright conscientiousness in his make-up as I have ever seen in a man. Have no fears that he will not attempt enough, or concern himself sufficiently, or assume too few responsibilities. A more proper fear is that he will not allow himself, and his family, enough from his busy days.

But, if the office is demanding—if it is at once lonely and yet seldom seems to give one enough time to think, only to respond—yet it is comforting to reflect upon the fact that the job is being done competently and well by hundreds of men and women in this country today. This is a happy circumstance not only for the institutions they lead, but for the good of higher education and our nation at large. I am confident that James Armstrong not only will be one of them, but will add to competence vision and humanity and the uplift that flows from a sense of joy in the pursuit of learning. Indeed, I can think of few happier blendings of institutions and men than this inauguration at Middlebury.

The College holds embodied within it the finest of the deep and strong traditions of liberal education, conceived as a commitment to the highest potential of humanity. And I know something of the strong convic-



INAUGURAL SALUTATIONS

The Inauguration of Dr. James I. Armstrong as President of Middlebury College opened with salutatory addresses by Dr. Robert F. Goheen, President of Princeton University, and Dr. Samuel S. Stratton, President Emeritus of Middlebury College. Their addresses follow.

Dr. Samuel S. Stratton

From many years—twenty years of attending inaugurations—I can say that I have had very little opportunity to discover what the emeritus president does, because very infrequently is he around at an affair like this. The reason he is not present I will not dwell upon. Sometimes it is because he did not survive, but of course there are other reasons too.

I might say that since I am still a surviving emeritus I have enjoyed a remark attributed to La Fontaine in which he said: "I divide my life into two parts. The first for sleeping and the second for doing nothing." This pleasant prospect for me is briefly postponed, but I can assure you that as President of Middlebury this opportunity for you will be long postponed.

You will find that you are needed and wanted. I leave it for you to distinguish between being needed and wanted. I know, however, that you will find your reward as President of Middlebury College largely in the pressures of need for your decisions, and want of your counsel. You will not regret these pressures that in my recollection were not associated with teaching in a university. You will find your administrative associates, your faculty, your alumni, and (I know) very high on the list, your students, worthy of your greatest efforts to understand them, to support them, and to cherish them.

After twenty years at Middlebury I can say that whatever the successes and failures may have been, no occupation nor career could have brought me a greater feeling of gratification than the honor of being president of this 163 year old liberal arts college. To you President Armstrong, I gladly and most enthusiastically pass on the responsibilities of this office. Your qualifications are of the highest and are well known. I, and all of the Middlebury family feel fortunate that you are the twelfth president of our College. I pledge you, and for the Middlebury community, our support. Our blessings and good wishes to you and your wife and family for a long and satisfying life in Middlebury. I am confident that you will build well on our ancient foundations here, so that this College will ever gain greater recognition as an institution dedicated not only to high academic standards, but also to the intellectual and spiritual welfare of our students, from all walks of life, and all sections of this nation, and beyond our borders.

Dr. Robert F. Goheen

According to the record, the first students were admitted to Middlebury November 5, 1800—almost exactly 163 years ago. Now, in England, November

Inaugural Luncheon

The Inaugural Luncheon filled the dining room of Redfield Proctor Hall. In his role of toastmaster, L. Douglas Meredith, a Trustee of the College and chairman of the Inauguration Committee, set the tone of warmth and informality as, with quips and anecdotes, he introduced the speakers.

Ralph E. Foote

Ralph E. Foote, Lieutenant Governor of Vermont and a resident of Middlebury brought the greetings of the community.

Dean John G. Bowker

Speaking for the faculty and staff was Dr. John G. Bowker, Dean of the Faculty. He said:

"Nineteen months ago Middlebury College embarked upon one of the most intensive manhunts ever undertaken in these parts. The 'most-wanted-man' had marked characteristics and his description was complete and unmistakable. A posse of faulty members and a posse of Trustees were given the scent and although their separate trails were frought with hazards the search ended abruptly when the two posses met at the gates of Princeton.

"No one could wish for a happier privilege than is mine on this most significant day in the history of Middlebury College. Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong—my congratulations and greetings are those of the entire faculty and staff of this College. We assure you, Mr. President, of our generous cooperation and loyal support in the years ahead. In ten short weeks you have demonstrated a profound understanding of our needs, a natural concern for us all as individuals, and a sympathetic respect for our tribal traditions many of which date back to the early 19th century. We have been particularly impressed by your concern for our intangible needs, the more difficult to realize by far in that they involve development in less striking areas of the educative process: the quality of teaching, the breadth of our vision, the fundamental philosophy of what we are striving for in a liberal arts college. With the rich heritage of your experience as a teacher and administrator at one of America's outstanding Universities you have captured the excitement, the joys, and the frustrations of teaching—all these give us confidence in you and in our future together."

Representing the men undergraduates, James T. McCormack, '64 commented:

"This morning, prior to the very impressive academic ceremony we have all witnessed, the President of the freshman class handed me a short message which he asked that I read, and I quote:

'President Armstrong:

'We, the freshman class would like to welcome you into our ranks. It may seem strange at first—being in a new school—but you'll get the hang of it. All the cliches about college are perfectly true: there is plenty of interesting, hard work from the day you begin, as you well know; and freshman year is, we feel, the hardest, what with new people and different situations which confronts us all.

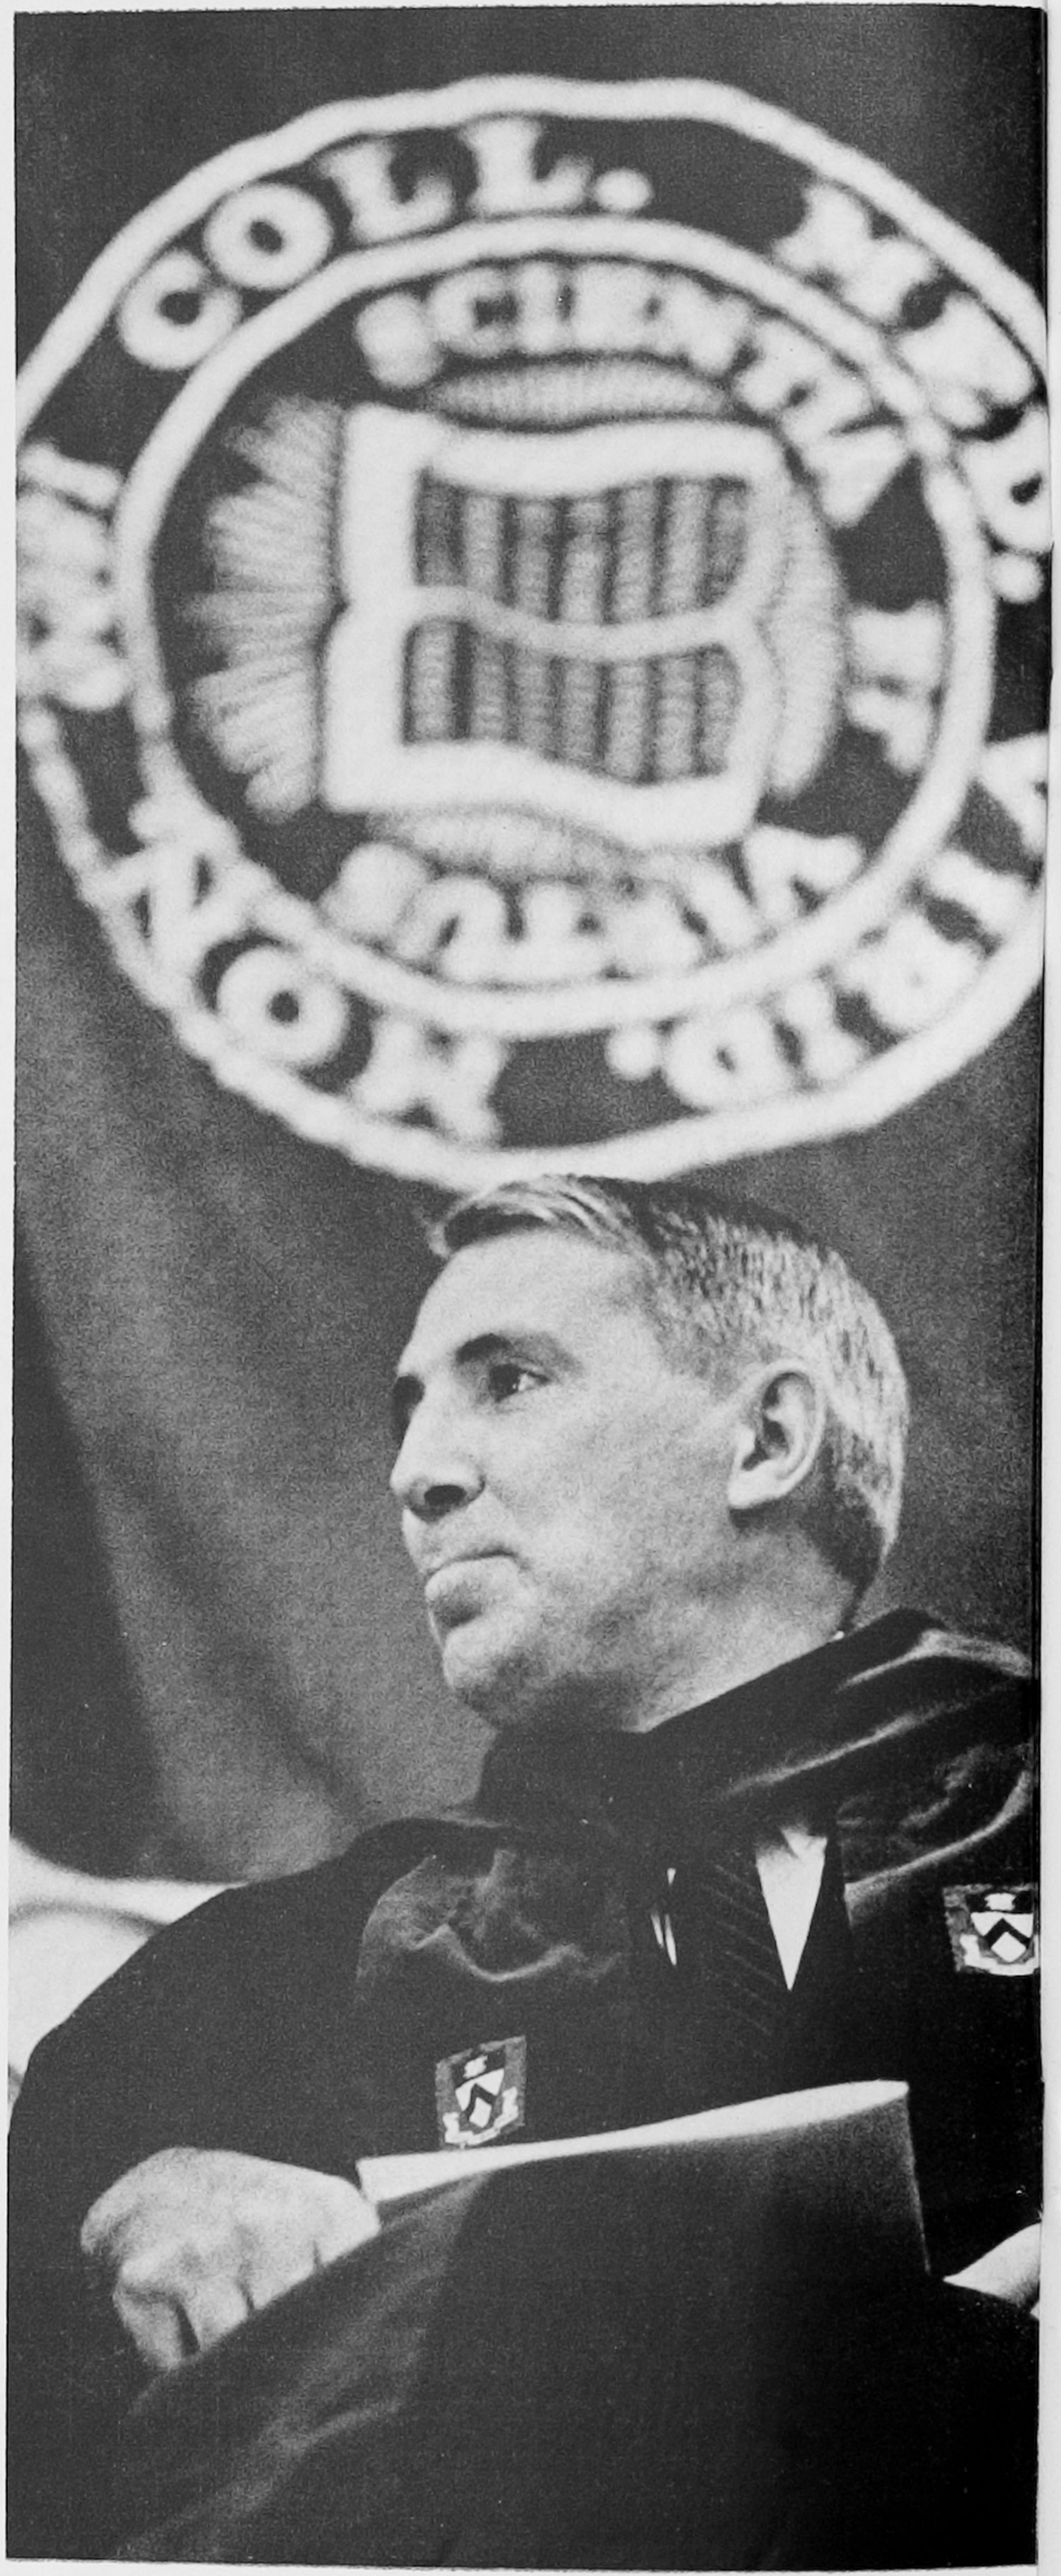
'Great country up here—hope you like to ski! Being a freshman you can't have a car yet, but if you say it's for the president most juniors and seniors will give you a ride. Let's see now: is there anything else? No—I guess we're ready to go; so from Adams to Zwilgmeyer, we doff the beanies we are now wearing in spirit and shout our loudest WELCOME to you as a fellow freshman! !'

tions which your new president holds about the vibrant and vital meaning of that often misused term, liberal education.

A whole man himself, he sees the educational process as a wholeness and he sees it as something intended to quicken and nourish a full, sensitive, and integral life. He knows that we do not live by bread alone, or by mind alone, but rather by the interwoven forces of intellect, feeling, will, judgement, aspiration, and faith. He has no illusions of grandeur for education that can be satisfied by dollars, by buildings, or by enrollment figures—though each of those is a critical implement or part of the process, and though either paucity or timidity in any one of these three respects can often cripple a college or a university. A student of the literature and thought—rightly called classical—of Greece and Rome, he has the finest expressions of those ancient cultures sounding in his ears, and (in Woodrow Wilson's words) he hears those great voices that ring down through the centuries into our own, telling us that humanity need not yield to the noisy calls of the day, but can develop in individuals the powers of the mind and heart to make thought and action more responsible, more generous, more worthy. And he sees clearly that this is an endless process of search and endeavor.

As a teacher, he is keenly sensitive to the fact that students are not divisible into social, intellectual, and physical components, and that they are not, either, mere numbers in the statistical summary. In just the same way as a scholar (in the broad and true sense) he knows that scientific and humane learning are not at root contraries but rather constitute a common striving toward a unity which we may only faintly apprehend, but which yet is there to beckon us on, and is always to be sought. You will, in short, find in him that catholicity of interest that responds to the appeals of many fields of learning; but his basic concerns in curricular questions will usually be, I venture to predict, those of relevance and relation to fundamental aims.

I have already suggested that the presidency of a college is commonly a job of inordinate busyness on the outside and frequent, necessary loneliness on the inside. It is therefore probably futile to wish that you who make up the faculty and student body of Middlebury can ever come to know your president as fully and as easily as those of us who treasure association with him from earlier days. Yet I would paraphrase a wise mentor (whom he will really identify) to predict in all certainty that, as he works with and for you, your new president will reveal himself unmistakably as one who subtly infects those about him with the energies of his own character, helps open the eyes of others to the great mysteries of being that surround and touch us all, and in his heart an affectionate concern, incorrigible and dominant, for his fellow men.



I knew personally most of the men whose names are perpetuated on our present stand of buildings, Governors Stewart and Mead, Joseph Battell, James Gifford, Reid Carr, Edwin Sunderland. I knew, in many cases quite intimately, most of the members of the Board of Trustees in the last fifty years, in fact, many of whom were students in my classes in their college days, and that I am now interviewing the grandchildren of my earlier students.

"The reason for my being here today is a more intimate one. Some thirty years ago, a young boy named Jimmy Armstrong, strolled into my classroom in the preparatory school where I was teaching at the time. He was not there because he wanted to be—he was sent. He had never heard of Middlebury College. The only Middlebury he knew was in Connecticut, a few miles away, where there was a well known girls' preparatory school. But from that moment his preparation for the Presidency of Middlebury College began.

"Now I am a modest man and do not claim credit for all this preparation. It just so happens that on theTaft School Faculty there were four other Middlebury graduates, to most or all of whom he was exposed. After graduation he strayed off to a little college down in New Jersey. This was strictly a family matter. I understand that his father helped to run the institution. But during all the years since, the leaven of Middlebury was working in his system and the inevitable happened. He is here today, as our new President—where he belongs.

"As I think back over the days when he was a schoolboy and consider what I have heard of his career since, I am led to believe that James Russell Lowell had someone like him in mind, when he penned what I think were among his finest lines.

> The longer on this earth we live
> And weigh the various qualities of men,
> The more we see the high stern featured beauty
> Of plain devotedness to duty,
> Steadfast and strong,
> Nor paid by mortal praise,
> But finding amplest recompense
> For life's ungarlanded expense,
> In deeds done squarely, and unwasted days

"After all, what finer tribute can be paid to a man? You have come a long way, Sir, since those schoolboy days, 'quorum pars Fui.'

"You will go yet a long way. When a Spaniard says farewell to a friend who is going on a journey, instead of saying, as we do, 'God be with you,' he uses an expression putting the burden where it really belongs. He says 'Go with God,' 'Vaya con Dios.'

"You are now starting out on the next stage of your journey. You have the enthusiastic support of your Board of Trustees, your faculty, your student body, and your Alumni. So I say unto you, James Armstrong, Vaya con Dios, 'Go with God' on your journey. If you follow this precept, we need none of us feel any apprehension about the future of Middlebury College."

"We would like to invite you to join us in our recreation, when we take a break from our academic endeavors. In order to help you get ready for these activities, I would like to present to you a gift from the entire student body. This gift is the loving work of the hands of the women, financed by the men—a hand knit sweater." These are the words of Marjorie A. Lam, '64, as she made the above presentation to Dr. Armstrong. James T. McCormack, '64, and L. Douglas Meredith, Chairman of the Inauguration Committee, look on. (Right) President Armstrong displays the sweater.

"The other three undergraduate classes would like to join with the freshman class in extending to you a very warm welcome to the Middlebury Campus.

"We realize that there will be many things which are new to you—a new modern language to learn and translate—for the differences between the SEPC, the CFEC, the BOG, the IFC and the FEPC are not readily apparent.

"But probably your biggest problem, coming from a men's university, will be the rather difficult transition to our female counterpart. We, too, found the transition difficult, but having survived this harrowing experience, we, the undergraduate men, would like to offer our advice to you, should the occasion arise.

"We are proud of the Middlebury we have known—its past and its present and we are confident we will be even prouder to be associated with its future—to work and watch as you build on its strong foundation."

GREETINGS from the women undergraduates were given by Marjorie A. Lam, '64, as she said:

"It is a great pleasure for me to bring you the greetings of the women undergraduates. The Middlebury women are always eager to welcome another handsome man to the campus.

"This has been an exciting day for the entire student body as we have had the opportunity to witness such impressive academic pomp. But the excitement which we feel today began last spring when we learned that the Trustees and the Faculty had found the man they wanted to be our next president. They then had the job of convincing him that he should come to Middlebury. We are very glad that they did a good job of persuasion.

"However, our excitement of last spring was based on hearsay—the recommendations and praises of those who knew you. And, as you all know, students don't like to take anyone's word for anything. We wanted to see for ourselves. In the few weeks that you have been at Middlebury we have seen for ourselves. Your energy and obvious enthusiasm for Middlebury have generated a feeling of optimism within the student body and a confidence that Middlebury College is in capable hands.

"Max has kindly offered the advice of the men in learning to cope with the women of the College. I assure you that we do not plan to create any problems for you. In fact, coming to us from a men's university, I am sure that you have already noted what the feminine touch can do for a college.

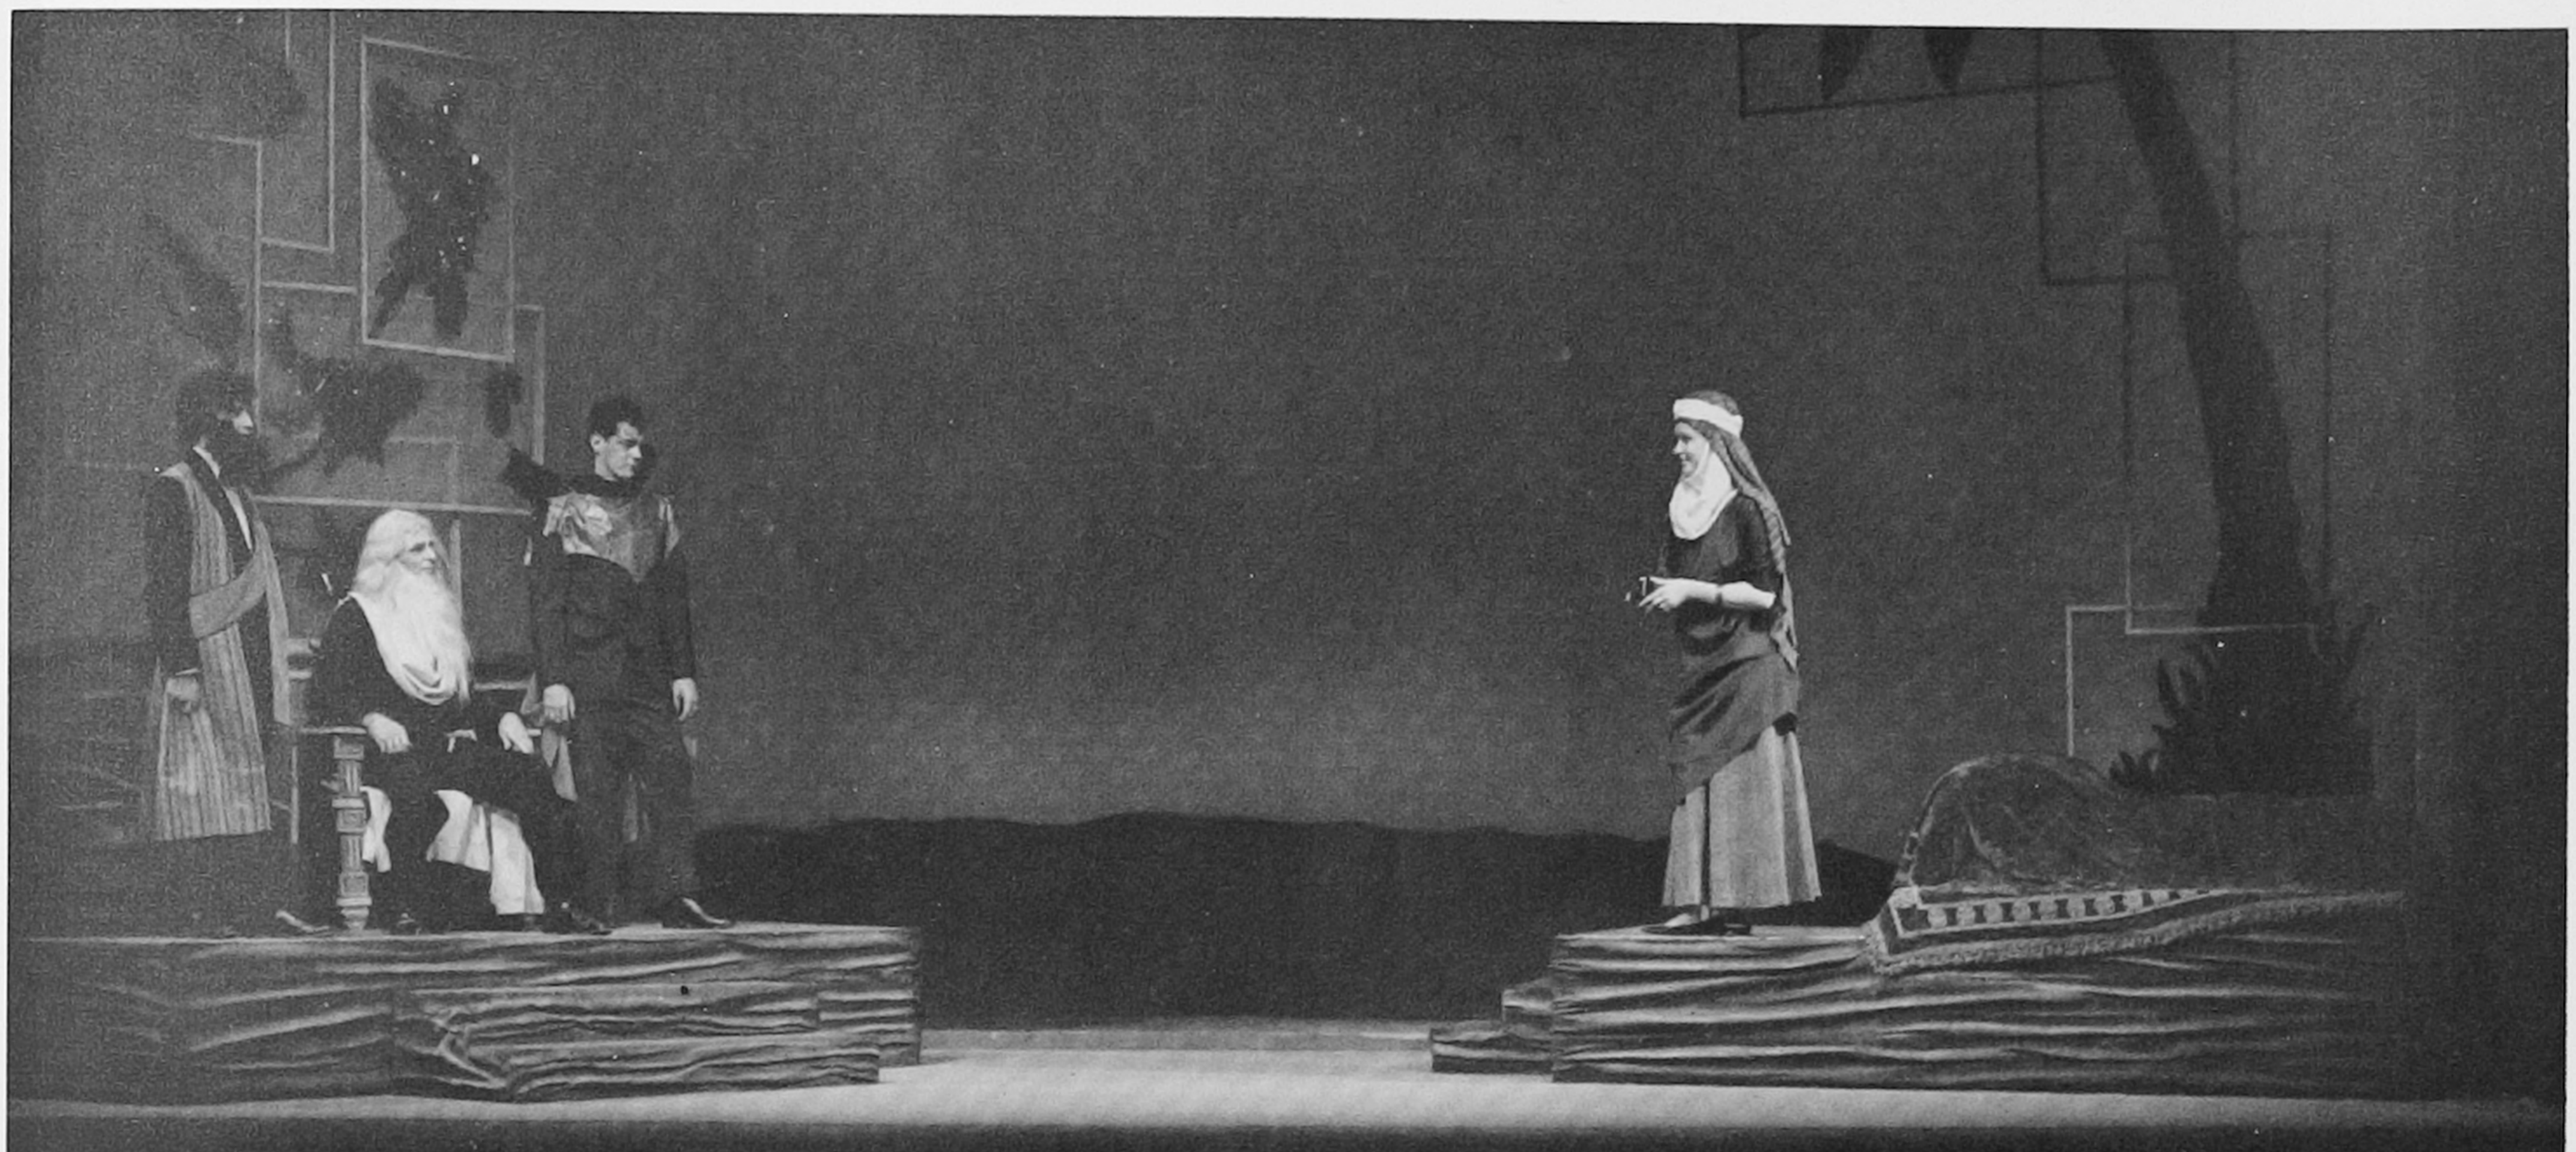
"Middlebury women are reputed to be the more intellectually oriented half of this student body. Whether this is true or not, at this time I would like to express the women's interest in the other aspect of Middlebury—recreation. Dr. Goheen and Dr. Stratton have expressed the fear that you will become so involved in your work for the College that you will not find enough time for relaxation. Rather than the difference between SEPC and CFEC, Student Educational Policy Committee and the Curriculum Faculty Evaluation Committee, the women are concerned that you learn to distinguish between the Proctor, the Ross, the Voter and the Allen. For our guests, these are ski trails at our College Snow Bowl, and knowing the difference between them can be life-saving information.

"We would like to invite you to join with us in our recreation, when we take a break from our academic endeavors. In order to help you get ready for these activities, I would like to present to you a gift from the entire student body. This gift is the loving work of the hands of the women, financed by the men—a hand knit ski sweater."

Duane L. Robinson

THE GREETINGS of the College's more than 10,000 Alumni were conveyed by Professor Emeritus Duane L. Robinson, '03, a resident of Middlebury and still active in the College community as an Admissions Counsellor. Speaking of the two reasons why he was asked to represent the Alumni he declared:

"My first reason for speaking here today is because my connection with the College spans the chasm between the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The Middlebury that I first knew consisted of three main buildings, a faculty of eight persons and a student body, as one of my colleagues said, 'from one to two hundred.'



Special Inaugural Program

The Inauguration of James I. Armstrong had its cultural aspect along with the ceremonial pageantry and postprandial speakers. The College's "cultural ambassadors"—the Middlebury College Choir and Madrigal Society, and College Players"—proved more than equal to the occasion in the presenting of Madrigals and Robert Frost's A Masque of Reason at the Wright Memorial Theatre.

The program opened with fanfares and a "Dedication" to President Armstrong. Diane Watson, '66, read from an Elizabethian scroll a poem—shown on this page—composed by Ben Johnson and spoken at King James I's entrance at Burleigh as prologue to a performance of The Gipsies Metamorphosed. The second stanza of this poem was adapted to the occasion of the Inauguration.

If for our thoughts there could but speech be found,
And all that speech be uttered in one sound
So that some Power above us would afford
The means to make a language of a word:
It should be, Welcome.
Then in act and voice
We would express how greatly we rejoice
To honor you, our president. Our heart,
Our words, our song would set this day apart.
Here we old loves, old loyalties renew
And with our humble talents honor you.

Mrs. James I. Armstrong has been Middlebury's "First Lady" only a short time. However, her graciousness and friendliness already have won her many friends among students, faculty, administration and residents of the community. Here she is shown receiving a tribute at the Inaugural Luncheon.

THE LUNCHEON concluded with the following remarks by President Armstrong:

". . . To each speaker and the group represented I return thanks. Dean Bowker, sir, my salutations to the faculty wherein lies our being; Mr. MacCormack and Miss Lam—my greetings to the students for whom we exist. I am greatly touched and I hope I shall be warmed, by the gift from Middlebury women: I could say, if you would forgive me, that I will be this winter wrapped in the wool of Marjorie Lam.

"Mr. Robinson, sir, my thanks to you, my teacher and my friend, you who 'catch up in one' so many elements of Middlebury.

"Lieutenant Governor Foote—to the people of Middlebury and to the people of Vermont my greetings. We shall try here at Middlebury to make our contribution to the life of the State.

"It may not now be inappropriate to remark that the President of Princeton University, himself a Professor of Classics, has today participated in a new metamorphosis which is not recorded, so far as I know, in all classical mythology, I mean the transformation of a Tiger into a Panther; henceforth for me Middlebury is 'The grandest Panther in the jungle.'

"I cannot refrain from a word of great gratitude to our Master of Heraldry, Professor Arthur Healy, for his amiable labors on our behalf both in the decorations and in the show of local collectors.

"Through him we saw mirrored forth the distinguished heritage of Middlebury.

"In the same manner I would thank Professors Volkert and Carter and Mr. Browne for their gracious and masterful presentations in theatre and music.

"There are a host of others . . . delegates and colleagues . . . the Inaugural Committee . . . too many to name; if there ever was a lesson in humility, an inauguration is it—for it is perfectly clear that no one person can be that important.

"But for what it represents—the transmission of responsibility and renewed dedication to educational aims—I am deeply grateful. Hence my thanks are finally to the Board of Trustees and the Faculty both of whom I shall seek to serve until another generation takes up the torch."

The inauguration of Dr. Armstrong as the twelfth president of Middlebury College concluded with a reception following the luncheon. (Below) Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong are congratulated by Mr. and Mrs. Fred P. Lang.

The Inaugural Address

Aspera Ad Artes Liberales

Mr. Chairman, President Goheen, Dr. Stratton, honored delegates, members of the Board of Trustees and the Faculty, members of the Senior Class, ladies and gentlemen—this is an extraordinarily felicitous occasion. It is with more than usual pleasure and gratitude that I thank President Goheen for joining Dr. Stratton and Mr. Hadley in the "laying on of hands." Dr. Stratton's touch has twenty years of experience with Middlebury and my friendship with President Goheen goes back to the days of early youth. He also represents Princeton University to which I owe a lifelong debt of gratitude for nurturing me as student and teacher. It was at Princeton too where I began the involvement with administration which has resulted in this wedding ceremony. I hope that the honeymoon will be just as long as possible—the truth is that a honeymoon is a good way to begin a marriage. In any case, I am today profoundly aware of the sustaining power of the past working in the present—that is to say, of what is here symbolized by Dr. Goheen, Dr. Stratton and Mr. Hadley.

To all the assembled delegates I extend the cordial greetings of Middlebury College. We are grateful to you all for joining us and supporting us today.

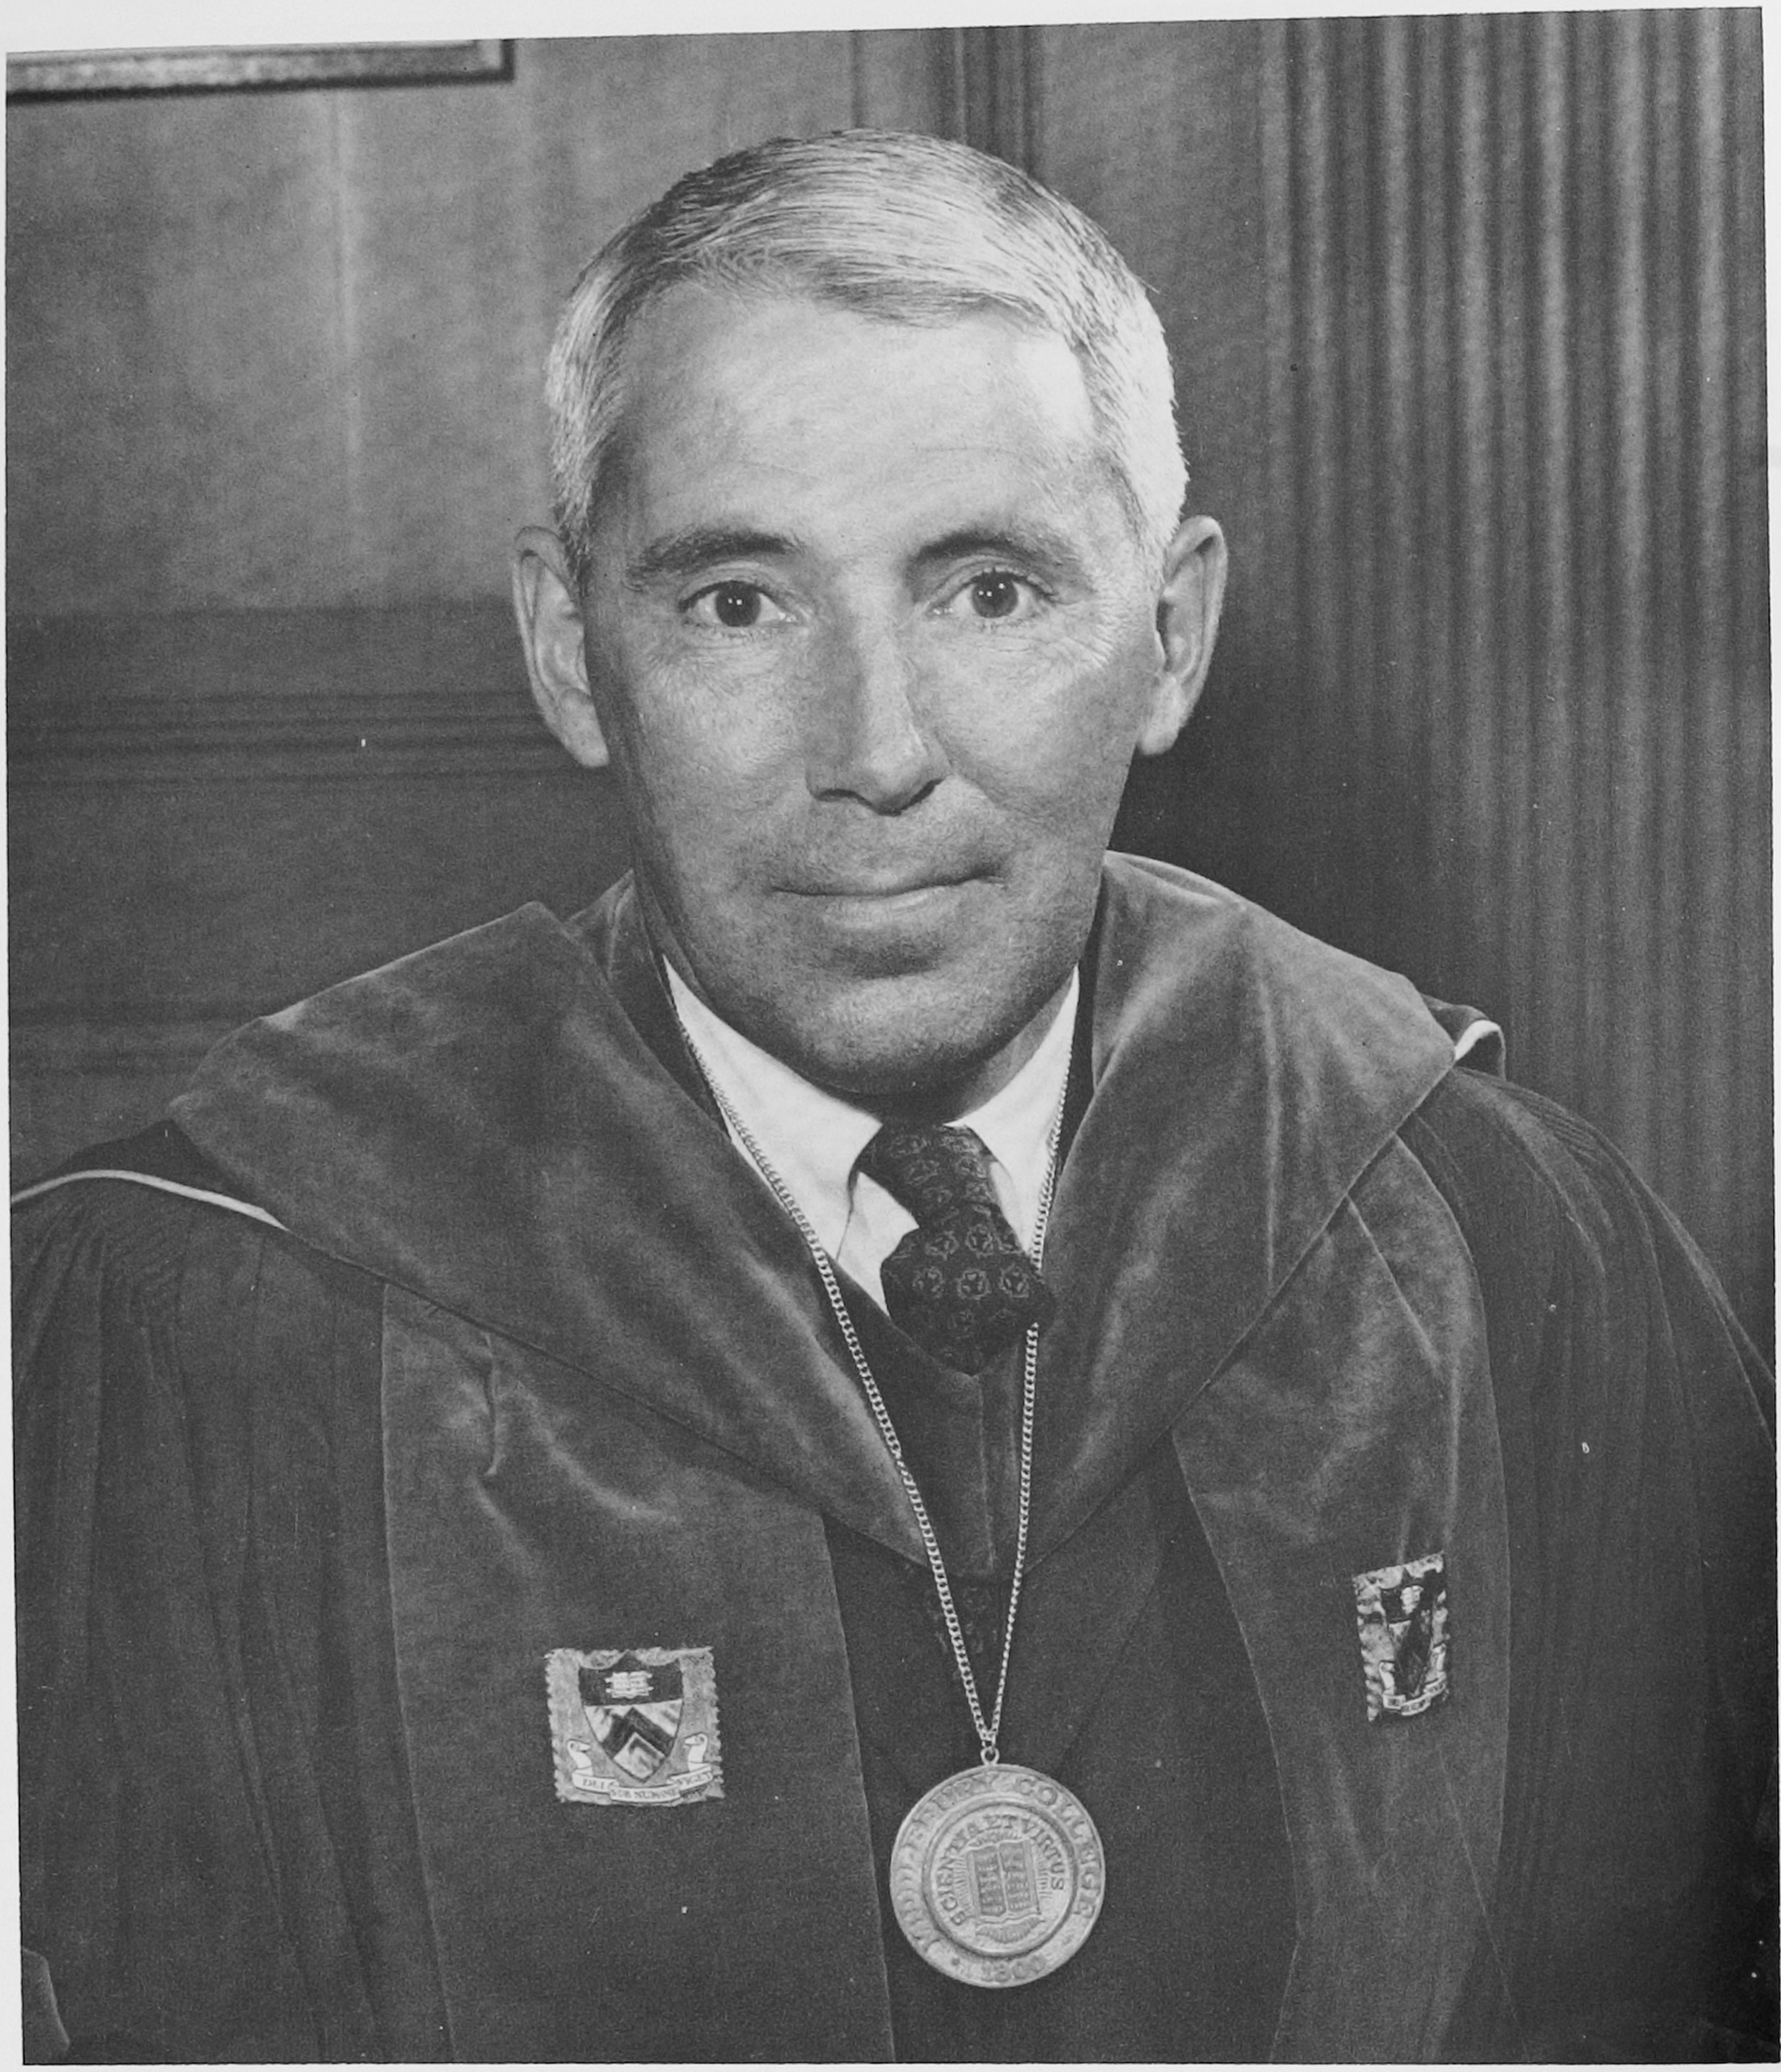
And now, as I start to share with you some thoughts on liberal education, I would note first a kind of peripeteia—a reversal in roles which at first I find awkward and to which I am not yet accustomed. The peripeteia is this: What as a teacher I have done with a steady sureness of its importance and relevance, I have now to talk about. I remember Professor Walter Stace saying in a lecture many years ago that there are two ways of telling someone what a horse is: either by describing it or pointing to it. In this analogy to teach is like pointing to the horse; there it is—there is in teaching the direct live contact with the student and this explains itself, but to talk about teaching is like trying to define and describe; to talk about education rather than engage in it is difficult. One indulgence I beg of you. If you should by chance detect a dependence on classical allusions, you will remember, won't you, that I taught Greek literature for 12 years and have only been in office 69 days—or a few minutes, if you will.

What concerns me now as I take up my new responsibilities at Middlebury College is the rightness and relevance of the liberal arts and liberal sciences in the modern world. There is no room in this hour of man's history on earth for luxury education with finishing-school overtones, for fad, frills and fringes, for new wine in old bottles which burst. What is at stake here at Middlebury is the importance and relevance of the liberal arts and liberal sciences—here and now—in this space-atomic-computer-satellite age—this age of continuing segregation and inequality, persecution and intolerance, prejudice and provincialism—yet at the same time this age of social and moral concern, of internationalism and cooperation, of gigantic strides in understanding through communication. In this age of massive contrasts and complexities it seems to me that the way of the liberal arts and liberal sciences is a way of incalculable value for our young men and women—a way to sensitize their values for living.

In short, as the new president of Middlebury College I am concerned to help guide this College past the perils of distraction or possible destruction. Indeed, I am concerned that Middlebury like the hero of Homer's Odyssey win home to Ithaca, past the perils and hazards of the sea. The dangers along the way, as they were for Odysseus, are numerous and multiformed. Like the Old Man of the Sea they assume many disguises, and we must, if we would see them exposed, lay strong, unrelenting hands upon them.

Permit me then first to identify a few of the major dangers and then to state, if I can, what is the nature of the "Ithaca"—the homeland—of the liberal arts and sciences.

My first concern is for the faculties of liberal arts colleges. Unless the College looks first to its faculty as the mainspring of its action, realizing that the quality of the faculty determines to an overwhelming degree the quality of the liberal arts program, the prophets of doom will prove to be right, though none now may believe them when enrollments are rising and the desire for an A.B. degree consumes the land. It is frightening to think how often the voice of the true prophet is, like Cassandra, heard but not heeded. Through Western history, the name of teacher has risen high and sunk



As you begin your service as President, I want to extend to you my warmest best wishes and full confidence that you will sustain the high traditions and standards which have been set by Middlebury College. You bring to this new assignment an outstanding record of scholarship, and it is most heartening that your talents will now serve this important and influential institution.

judgment, of the very highest importance to the individual and to the total ordering of things. What Ithaca stands for here is a way of pursuing the truth and a way of looking upon the nature of reality.

This way is always open rather than closed, restrained rather than precipitous; it finds meaning in the tension of opposites and does not shy away from paradox. It is the way of exploration and curiosity, whose followers must always sense that a lifetime of striving to know and understand may give only a glimpse of the El Dorado beyond and that the El Dorado may be just where we began.

> We shall not cease from exploration
> And the end of all our exploring
> Will be to arrive where we started
> And know the place for the first time.
> T. S. Eliot, Four Quartets

This way, of which I speak, shuns arrogance, self-satisfaction; it is a specific against transgression, and the failure to recognize and honor the freedom and integrity of others. Violence is curbed; rudeness is outlawed. It is a way on the one hand to freedom, on the other to restraint. With great and powerful energy it releases new worlds of comprehension, sympathy and understanding while it restrains forever narrowness and provincialism and prejudice.

It lays upon us the mandate of reason. This way is basically optimistic and founded upon the belief that man does have the capacity to grow, both intellectually and morally—hence our schools, colleges, universities are direct descendants of those prototypes founded in Athens—the Academy of Plato, the Lyceum of Aristotle. This was no naive optimism. There was then, as there is now, a profound recognition of the destructive forces in man, at one moment latent, at another bursting forth in the fury of the cionysiac, genocide, racism, and the Black Shirts. Yet while there is restraint to the aberrant irrational, there is also stimulus to the world of feeling and emotion whose validity beyond reason is never questioned, for the "heart has its reasons which the reason knows not."

This is too much; the claim is extravagant, you may say. Perhaps so, in the same sense that the Athens of Pericles never achieved in reality the level to which Pericles called the Athenians in his magnificent funeral oration over the fallen in the first year of the Peloponnesian War. Pericles said, "For we are lovers of the beautiful, yet simple in our tastes, and we cultivate the mind without loss of manliness. . . . The great impediment to action is, in our opinion, not discussion, but the want of that knowledge which is gained by discussion preparatory to action. For we have a peculiar power of thinking before we act and of acting too."

The colleges of the liberal arts and sciences must raise up men and women who think and act. The danger is, it seems to me, that they should ever mistake this role and try to be other than they have proclaimed themselves.

We go therefore on the road to Ithaca, but, like Odysseus, we will not stop even there. For a liberal arts college has no final fixed home. Its teaching is of knowledge which keeps advancing; each day, each month, each year the horizons are receding. The direction of advance is clear; the goal is infinite.

low in the value judgments of men. Yet to understand what it is to be a teacher in the fullest sense will assure us of the need for such men and women and explain their often ambiguous reputation, for not always has the teacher been honored in his own country. Two great figures stand out for all time—Socrates of Athens who would not cease from seeking the truth by the road of questioning and doubt, and Jesus of Nazareth who proclaimed a way to the truth through affirmation and faith. Both were teachers; neither would stop teaching; both raised almost without compare the level of man's awareness and understanding. The valiant spirit of these two gives us a measure of what matters so deeply to man—his desire to know and his commitment to truth. The teacher may then be regarded as dangerous, for he may disregard the norms, he may goad and prod, he may be a gadfly upon society. Unfortunately for tranquility but fortunately for mankind, the questioner may go after matters far more important than shallow conventions, and, in so doing, offend the deeply held convictions of good men: he may seem outrageous; but he must be supported, not just tolerated, so long as his goal is the pursuit of truth. There comes to mind that fine old phrase which I have from a classical colleague: "I love Plato, but I love the truth more." And so this seems to me to be so; that in the liberal arts and liberal sciences the teacher assumes a supra-important role, for teaching is essentially a personal task.

I recall hearing one of the great teachers of my time, Charles Grosvenor Osgood, say: "We need, therefore, teachers who care most of all for other men as individuals, wherever they find them, on the campus, in the world, men of all sorts and conditions. We need teachers who, however learned and expert transcend their specialty with a constant sense of its final value in human terms; so that whatever they teach, whether science or humanities, their teaching is authenticated, not only by their expert knowledge, but by this transcendent sense of its real value—in short, the teacher who is humanly greater than his subject."

My next point—the voice of specialization and pre-professionalism is heard more and more strongly in the land. We in the four year liberal arts colleges should not deplore this or seek to skirt it like some Scylla and Charybdis. We need, I think, to recognize the imperatives of our own day while getting some perspective from the past. More than a century ago the editor of a widely circulated journal—The Ladies Repository of 1851—was worried about this problem.

> "For when the colleges of this country shall have fallen to the low work of fitting young men for the bar, the pulpit, the sick bed, . . . and the true, noble, glorious idea of a universal education will have been given up, and victory will have perched upon the inglorious banner of the times. We shall then have a singular set of graduates annually issuing from our colleges. Each individual will have a limited portion of his mental powers specifically and extravagantly cultivated, with another portion almost wholly neglected. . ."

This reminds me of that fine old story about Montaigne—how he was riding across a plain one day when he met a company of men and greeted them with "Good Morning, Gentlemen." To which one of them replied, "We are not gentlemen! I am a grammarian, my friend here is a scientist and this other is a linguist." Upon receiving this dismal reply, Montaigne is said to have ridden off in search of more humane company, for he knew, as do we, that knowledge must be humanized.

We must stretch every means we have to keep the liberal arts truly liberal while recognizing that the colleges of this country must prepare a host of young men and women for graduate and professional schools. There are no pat solutions; no golden bough for easy entry. We shall have to hammer out new ways of keeping the spirit of the liberal arts while meeting our responsibilities to ever expanding knowledge.

There is, however, a melodious and alluring song of success by adding to the curriculum, whatever is new, whatever popular. Never mind whether what we are doing now is done in accordance with the highest standards, self-imposed. Rejoice, for the catalogue will be fatter and more impressive if we add a new department or field of study. This is a subtle song with many verses and many versions. Four-year liberal arts colleges are on trial—on the razor's edge—according to Mr. Sidney Tickton of the Ford Foundation. Avoid the Siren's song: stop up your ears. For though it is not as alluring as the song of the Sirens, one less striking but more difficult and more important way to nurture high quality in a liberal arts program is to concentrate on the excellence of what is being done. We may adopt new ideas, and we must not assume that we have a counsel of perfection; but let us not seek novelty for its own sake. And there is an ancillary dividend—an economic soundness which will strengthen the sinews for service and survival against other dangers.

And finally there is the insidious and ever-threatening peril that in our enthusiasm for finding solutions and in developing educational theory we will lose sight of the individual as we program and pattern education. We must never forget that liberal arts colleges are primarily concerned with the person who knows—with the individual—not knowledge for its own sake. Hence, it is the engagement with knowledge which makes all the difference, which leads students into the realms of gold and toward Ithaca.

What is at stake in our journey to Ithaca is, in my

The Heraldry

Symbolic decorations relating to the political, social, and educational history of the United States, Vermont, the Town of Middlebury, and the College were on display over the rostrum at the Inauguration. The central panel pays tribute to the discovery of the Middlebury region by Samuel de Champlain and to the presence of the French at neighboring Fort Ticonderoga. This bastion is connected in the minds of most Americans with the figure of Ethan Allen, who took it by surprise, "in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." Much of our local territory was originally granted by a Bourbon King to the Seigneur Hocquart, who, in turn, deeded it to the Seigneur Lotbiniere. The tenure of this Grant was terminated by the loss of this territory to the English after the French and Indian War. The Seigneur Lotbiniere by way of compensation was granted a Comté, which was named after him, in the Province of Quebec. The central panel features THE ARMS OF FRANCE, the dominant motif being three gold fleur-de-lis on an azure field, surmounted by a gold helmet with an open visor. This, in turn, is surmounted by the imperial crown of France in two stages. The escutcheon is supported by two angels dressed in dalmatics with the royal arms of three gold fleur-de-lis on an azure field. These angels also hold banners decorated with THE ARMS OF FRANCE. The escutcheon is surrounded by the collars of St. Michael and the Holy Spirit and is set in a Pavilion formed by an azure cloak strewn with gold fleur-de-lis and lined with ermine. Above is the cry MONTJOYE, ST. DENIS. This utterance originated when Christian pilgrims from the north, approaching Rome by the Via Flaminia, saw from the summit of Monte Mario, or Vaticanus, the Eternal City for the first time. Attached to the Pavilion is the oriflamme of France, again an azure field with gold fleur-de-lis surmounted with the device LILIA NON LABORAT NE QUE NENT. The composition is based on one in L'Art Heraldique by Monsieur Baron, published by Charles Osmont at Paris in 1680, and was originally supplied by Miss Suzanne Gauthier of The Metropolitan Museum of Art. On each side of this device are the crests of the Bourbons.

On the lectern is the Seal of Middlebury College, founded in 1800, and on center is THE GREAT SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES. To the left are the Crest of the State of Vermont, the Seal of Incorporation legalizing the founding of the Town of Middlebury as a Royal Grant by George III of England in 1761, and a symbol of the Iroquois Indians, the original inhabitants of this area.

To the right are displayed the Crest of Princeton University, where Dr. James I. Armstrong, the twelfth President of Middlebury College, was educated and where he taught, and where President Robert F. Goheen of Princeton, today's honored guest and speaker, also studied and taught; the Crest of Harvard University, where the retiring President, Samuel S. Stratton, studied and taught for many years; and the Crest of Yale University, the Alma Mater of Timothy Dwight and Jeremiah Atwater. It was Timothy Dwight, President of Yale University, who smiled upon the concept of a college in Middlebury and upon the application of the Vermont State Legislature for a charter. Jeremiah Atwater was the first President of Middlebury College.

Below the crests are the flags of the United States, the State of Vermont, neighboring Canada, the Province of Quebec, and the United Nations. The French Tricolor of the Republic is indicated as a tribute to the help and association of the French Government in the work of the largest of the Middlebury College Language Schools. The flowers above the platform have been chosen to recall the colors of Middlebury College.

PROFESSOR ANDREWS, HEAD OF THE PHILOSOPHY DEPARTMENT

IS INTERVIEWED BY THE NEWS LETTER ON . . .

PHILOSOPHY AT MIDDLEBURY

Q. Let us begin with a question which it has not been necessary to ask the previous departments interviewed. Everybody knows, to some degree, what goes on in mathematics or chemistry courses, but people who have not studied philosophy are apt to have rather vague notions about it. What, then, is philosophy?

A. That is itself a philosophical question which has received different answers in different ages and even today from different schools of thought. Perhaps all would agree, however, that philosophy is a persistent attempt to think clearly and critically about beliefs which we unwittingly assume in everyday life and in science but which are not, and in the nature of the case cannot be, justified by science. For example, science tells us nothing about values. We constantly make judgments of right and wrong, thereby assuming some general standard of moral value. If we ask what this standard is and then, having made it clear to ourselves, ask whether it is justifiable, we have a philosophical question. Again, scientists assume, as we all do, that their observations give them information about an independently existing world and that these provide a basis for predictions of the future. The philosopher asks whether these assumptions are justifiable; and once these questions are raised they turn out to be surprisingly difficult to answer.

Q. What good does philosophy do?

A. If you mean does it have any practical effects, it is perhaps sufficient to mention as an example that certain philosophical beliefs concerning the nature of man and of society lie behind our acceptance of democracy, whereas different beliefs lie behind totalitarianism. But aside from whatever practical value philosophy may have, we believe that thinking about these questions and knowing some of the answers that have been given to them is worthwhile for its own sake. As Socrates, the father of Western philosophy put it, "The unexamined life is not worth living."

Q. One sometimes hears the complaint that philosophers are forever arguing the same old questions. They never settle anything and they make no progress. Is this true?

A. This complaint is a very old one. It was made in Plato's day. Of course some of the big questions concerning existence, creation, the nature of reality, etc., will never admit of final answers. But it is a mistake to suppose that there has been no progress in philosophy. Two examples: In the 18th century the moral philosopher, Bishop Butler, disposed once and for all of the naturalistic argument that all human actions are basically selfish. He did this by showing that the conception of selfishness on which the argument depends is vacuous. However, not all problems yield to solution easily. In the 4th century B.C. the Eleatic philosopher, Zeno, in a series of brilliant arguments, demonstrated that there is no motion because the very existence of motion would involve us in logical contradiction. This is a startling conclusion which flies in the face of experience. (The most famous of the arguments is the one which purports to show that if Achilles gives the tortoise a head start in a race, then he will never be able to catch him.) Philosophers were baffled by these arguments for over two thousand years. But in our own time, because of their greater understanding of the mathematical continuum and its application to space and time, philosophers have made real progress in dealing with Zeno.

Q. Philosophy, as it has been taught and written about, often has seemed to be closely allied with religion. In the curriculum should these subjects be coupled within one department?

A. Most philosophers today would insist that philosophy is an independent discipline which should stand by itself in the curriculum. The Middle Ages, the great age of faith, was a period in which philosophy was "the handmaid of theology." But this was not true in the age of the Greeks, nor is it true today. One of the distinctive things about philosophy is its relevance to every area of human interest, without prejudice.

Q. In the liberal arts college is there a responsibility on the part of the philosophy department to provide its students with what is called a "philosophy of life?"

A. Clearly there is no such responsibility. The teaching of philosophy is not a kind of indoctrination. Rather it

Late News Happenings

President Armstrong has announced the establishment of a $10,000 Faculty Research Fund that will be used for the "promotion of faculty scholarship and research." The Fund will be administered by a committee consisting of the chairmen of the Divisions of Humanities, Foreign Languages, Social Sciences, and Natural Sciences. Dr. Armstrong will chair the committee.

The Editor of THE NEWS LETTER is always interested in considering for publication views of individual contributors, all of whom have a connection - as members, alumni, or parents - with the College. Middlebury has a continuing interest in the exchange of ideas and giving a hearing to divergent ideas of thought and discussion through the mediums of "Letters to the Editor" and unsolicited articles.

Thirty-one educators are among the fathers of the Class of 1967. A president, an assistant to the president, four deans and eleven professors are among the college personnel who have freshman sons or daughters. Among secondary school fathers are two headmasters, a superintendent, an assistant headmaster, three high principals and seven teachers. The roster represents seventeen colleges, seven high schools, and seven independent preparatory schools.

The Trustees of the College have voted to increase tuition from $1,400 to $1,500 beginning with the academic year 1964-65. President Armstrong in making the announcement said: "Middlebury has sought by every means possible, and with notable success, to keep down the cost of higher education. There has been no raise in tuition since 1961. . . While raising the tuition, we are at the same time conscious of our own responsibility to students. . . Hence, there will be substantial allocations to scholarship and loan funds for students requiring assistance. . . The quality of our liberal arts program depends upon the quality of the human base—especially the faculty. Our most important single effort is to maintain and strengthen the faculty. We know the cost is high but we are sure the objectives are worth it."

Seventy-four members of the freshman class entered the College this year with a total of 181 credit hours. These students received Advanced Credit for achievement in their secondary school Advanced Standing Programs. There has been a steady growth in the number of students entering Middlebury with Advanced Credit. Last year 126 freshmen entered the College in this category.

Gifts and grants to the College through December 31, 1963 totaled $350,383.71.

A three-year project in pure chemical research will be undertaken by Dr. Robert W. Gleason, '54, assistant professor of Chemistry, under a $9,000 grant from the Petroleum Research Fund administered by the American Chemical Society. He will attempt in his research to "learn something about the pathway by which unusual organic oxidation occurs." The grant provides for assistance by a promising undergraduate interested in research experience.

Middlebury College, for the second straight year, has placed two members of its soccer team on the All-America Squad. They are A. Keith VanWinkle, '64, and J. Davis Webb, '66. Keith made first team All-America last year.

Mrs. Stratton Dies Suddenly

Loss to her family, the community, and Middlebury—a devoted wife and mother, and an energetic worker in college and community affairs—occurred when Mrs. Marjorie Austin Stratton, 64, wife of President Emeritus Samuel S. Stratton died suddenly in New York City on January 10, 1964.

The Rev. Charles P. Scott, College Chaplain, expressed the feelings of the College family and Middlebury community when he delivered the following eulogy at Mrs. Stratton's funeral in Mead Memorial Chapel.

"For more than 20 years Marjorie Stratton shared her husband's life on this campus and adorned his career. In fact I have not known anyone more intensely devoted to Middlebury College than she. We will not soon forget her interest in the beauty of the campus, inside and out. We will remember her enthusiastic presence at our stated occasions: lectures, conferences, concerts, the Carnival Ball, and hockey games. And who could fail to remember the warm hospitality of her home which in a very real sense was a kind of "home" for all of us who live and work "on the Hill." But most of all, college folk, particularly teachers and their wives—will recall how swiftly she responded to trouble—how quickly she heard of a sick child or a tired and worn out young mother, and came to bring cheer and encouragement and love. I think she knew the name of every faculty child. Indeed for two decades her good life has been built into the life of this College and its family and has enriched all our lives.

"Although the College was her first love, she was utterly devoted to this town, its people and its institutions. The Museum, the Women's Club, Porter Hospital where she served as grey lady, and particularly the League of Women Voters, benefited from her leadership, her initiative, and enthusiastic support.

"But to many Townsfolk her deep concern for the blind will seem to have been Marjorie Stratton's most touching contribution. How many of us realize that she mastered braille herself, learned to use a braille typewriter, and transcribed books and articles into braille. She herself was very proud of this, but she never boasted about it. Yes, this town is a better place because she gave herself to it.

"But those who knew her all over the world will remember her for utter integrity and kindness. She was quite without malice, and I never heard her say an unkind word of anyone.

"Who so adorns our human family as a thoroughly good person of strong character and deep kindness: A few in any community are brilliant, some are shrewd, many are clever, and too, many are glib. But humanity is exalted by those—such as Marjorie Stratton—who are good—who see need and meet it without fuss and feathers. . ."

Middlebury Honors Trustee

Hall Park McCullough, for forty-four years a member of the Board of Trustees of Middlebury College, has been elected a Trustee Emeritus. Simultaneously with his election, the Trustees voted the following tribute in honor of Mr. McCullough's long service to the College.

When a man has entered into the ninety-second year of his life, and when, for almost half of that time, he has been concerned with the affairs of Middlebury College—then it is high time for that institution to take special note of these facts.

Such a man is Hall Park McCullough. Mr. McCullough was born in San Francisco on June 23, 1872. He earned his A.B. degree from Yale University in 1894, and his LL.B. degree from New York Law School two years later. Admitted to the bar in 1896, he began a long and distinguished career which led to a partnership in one of New York City's outstanding law firms—an association which he has kept for many years.

Of special interest are the many and varied associations he has had with affairs in Vermont. From these we cite his service as Trustee of Bennington College, of the Vermont Soldiers' Home and of the Vermont Historical Society. Beginning in 1919, he has served as a Trustee of Middlebury College for forty-four years. The College has benefitted greatly from his wise counsel and generous support.

When, on October 12, 1963, Mr. McCullough made known to the Board his wish to retire, that body responded to his request with reluctance, but with pride. On that date he was unanimously elected Trustee Emeritus.

The President and Fellows of Middlebury College hereby express their deep gratitude and appreciation to Mr. McCullough, for his long and faithful service. Furthermore, the Trustees direct that a copy of this tribute be sent to Mr. and Mrs. McCullough.

Mr. and Mrs. McCullough reside in North Bennington, Vt., where they will celebrate their sixty-third wedding anniversary next November.

The College has received a $5,000 teaching grant under the DuPont Company's annual program of aid to education, according to a recent announcement by President James I. Armstrong. This grant is similar to others being awarded mostly to liberal arts colleges to help these colleges maintain and improve the excellence of their teaching.

Each of the grants consists of $2,500 for chemistry teaching and $2,500 for other courses. Funds for chemistry teaching are to be used in ways that will most effectively advance instruction of a subject and stimulate interest in it. The other half of the grant may be used in similar ways to strengthen the teaching of other subjects that contribute importantly to the education of scientists and engineers.

is a kind of inquiry. The prime function of philosophy courses in the curriculum is to get students to think—to think more clearly and more deeply than they ever have before. In this way they will become better prepared to work out a philosophy of life which will be their own.

Q. Have there been significant changes in the philosophy department or in the philosophy curriculum at Middlebury within the last generation?

A. Until 1937 the philosphy department at Middlebury was a one-man department. Professor V. C. ("Gramp") Harrington was the last man to shoulder all the teaching himself. Today the philosophy staff consists of three full time men. Because these men are differently oriented, a balanced point of view is maintained within the department. Dr. L. C. Bigelow came to Middlebury from Harvard in 1952. His fields are history of philosophy, ethics, and theory of knowledge. Dr. V. V. Klive, from Columbia, is specially trained in the philosphy of religion and in existentialism. I have continued my work in logic and the philosophy of science. Our big course is the introduction to philosophy which is open to freshmen. The enrollment here is now 130 students. The instruction in this course is carried out by the entire department on a cooperative basis. Each teacher conducts discussion sections and he also gives some of the lectures for the entire class. In addition to the upperclass courses listed in the catalogue the department encourages its advanced students to undertake independent work in conference courses (the so called "50 course").

In philosophy, as elsewhere, today's students are the beneficiaries of the revolution in publishing. They have ready access to all sorts of materials which simply were not available when their parents were students. In this connection it is interesting to note that the late Prof. Hillis Kaiser, who was chairman of this department in the forties, was one of the pioneers in the move (now widely accepted in the teaching of philosophy) to get students away from stereotyped textbooks into source readings.

Probably the most significant change in the philosophy curriculum at Middlebury within the last generation is a marked change in emphasis. Without forsaking the historical tradition we do more today with contemporary philosophic thought. This is inevitable in such a rapidly changing world. In the thirties positivism was the most vital and influential philosophy in the western world. But since the war we have witnessed the rise of analytic and linguistic philosophy in England and existentialism on the continent. These are two powerful movements to be reckoned with. Present day philosophers, for the most part, no longer engage in elaborate system building. They deal successively with particular problems by means of a rigorous, thorough-going analysis. What we have here is, in a real sense, a return to the Socratic method.

Q. Do many students major in philosophy, and do many of the majors go on to graduate work in the field?

A. Comparatively few students major in philosophy—an average, perhaps, of four or five in each class. Students are naturally concerned about what they will be doing after their graduation from college, and most of them tend to major in subjects which will have more of a direct bearing on their vocational interests. Nor do many of our philosophy majors pursue the subject further at the graduate level. The important thing about undergraduate philosophy would seem to be its relevance to a wide variety of other subjects. History and literature students elect the history of philosophy in considerable numbers. Science students look to the philosophy of science or to logic, while students of the fine arts or music are more apt to elect the course in aesthetics. Prospective law students will often show an interest in logic or ethics.

Inaugural Notes . . .

Dr. James C. McLeod, '26, was the guest preacher at the Inaugural Service on Sunday, November 11, at Mead Chapel. Dr. McLeod, Dean of Students at Northwestern, was his University's delegate at the Inauguration of Dr. James I. Armstrong as the twelfth president of Middlebury College.

A special anthem composed by Robert Browne, Instructor in Music, was sung by the College Choir at the Inaugural Service.

Members of the committee in charge of arrangements for the Inauguration consisted of the following faculty, staff and members of the Board of Trustees: Karl L. Anderson, Dean John G. Bowker, Walter E. Brooker, Alan Carter, Paul M. Cubeta, Elbert C. Cole of the Board of Trustees, Samuel Guarnaccia, Egbert C. Hadley of the Board of Trustees, Arthur K. D. Healy, George H. Huban, Dean Elizabeth B. Kelly, L. Douglas Meredith of the Board of Trustees, Walter A. Moyer, Jr., George H. Patrick, III, Henry B. Prickitt, Charles P. Scott, Carroll Rikert, Jr., Erie T. Volkert, and Klaus H. Wolff.

The silver medallion, symbol of the office of the President of Middlebury College, was used for the first time in the history of the College in the transfer of the presidency from Dr. Stratton to Dr. Armstrong. It was created during the latter part of Dr. Stratton's term of office and was worn by him during the Commencement exercises of the past two years.

Long hours of preparation on the part of Gordon B. Bridges, Jr., Director of Dining Halls, and his staff, resulted in an excellent Inaugural Luncheon. Another member of the College staff who also contributed to the success of the Inauguration was Harvey N. Drinkwine, Superintendent of Plant Maintenance and Operation.

This issue of THE NEWS LETTER provides the fifth and last segment of your Alumni Directory. The Winter issues in 1960 through 1964 covered the classes having reunions in those years. This fifth segment completes the Directory and next year we will start anew with a revision of the segment published in 1960. Thus, if you have kept the Winter issues for the last five years, you have a complete directory. If you have not kept the other issues, start with this year and collect a complete directory by saving the revisions for the next five years.

The pages of this directory may be removed without disturbing THE NEWS LETTER and margins are sufficient to allow you to punch and file in a looseleaf notebook. It is a continuing project which constantly provides you with a directory in which the oldest section is five years old. This is much better than most college directories which are usually revised each tenth year. It is our hope that this information will help you to keep closer contact with members of your class.

Space requirements made certain policy decisions necessary. Abbreviations were used throughout when necessary. Asterisked (*) names indicate Alumni-ae who had not returned their information inquiry cards at the time this directory was going to press. Thus, the addresses, etc., pertaining to these members of the Middlebury family are shown as they appear in the files of the Alumni Office.

Some Alumni-ae are listed "Address Unknown." If you have information about these men and women, please send it to your Alumni Office.

In 1934, the jumping and other events of the first Winter Carnival were held on Chipman Hill. Today the College's modern Snow Bowl facilities are utilized.

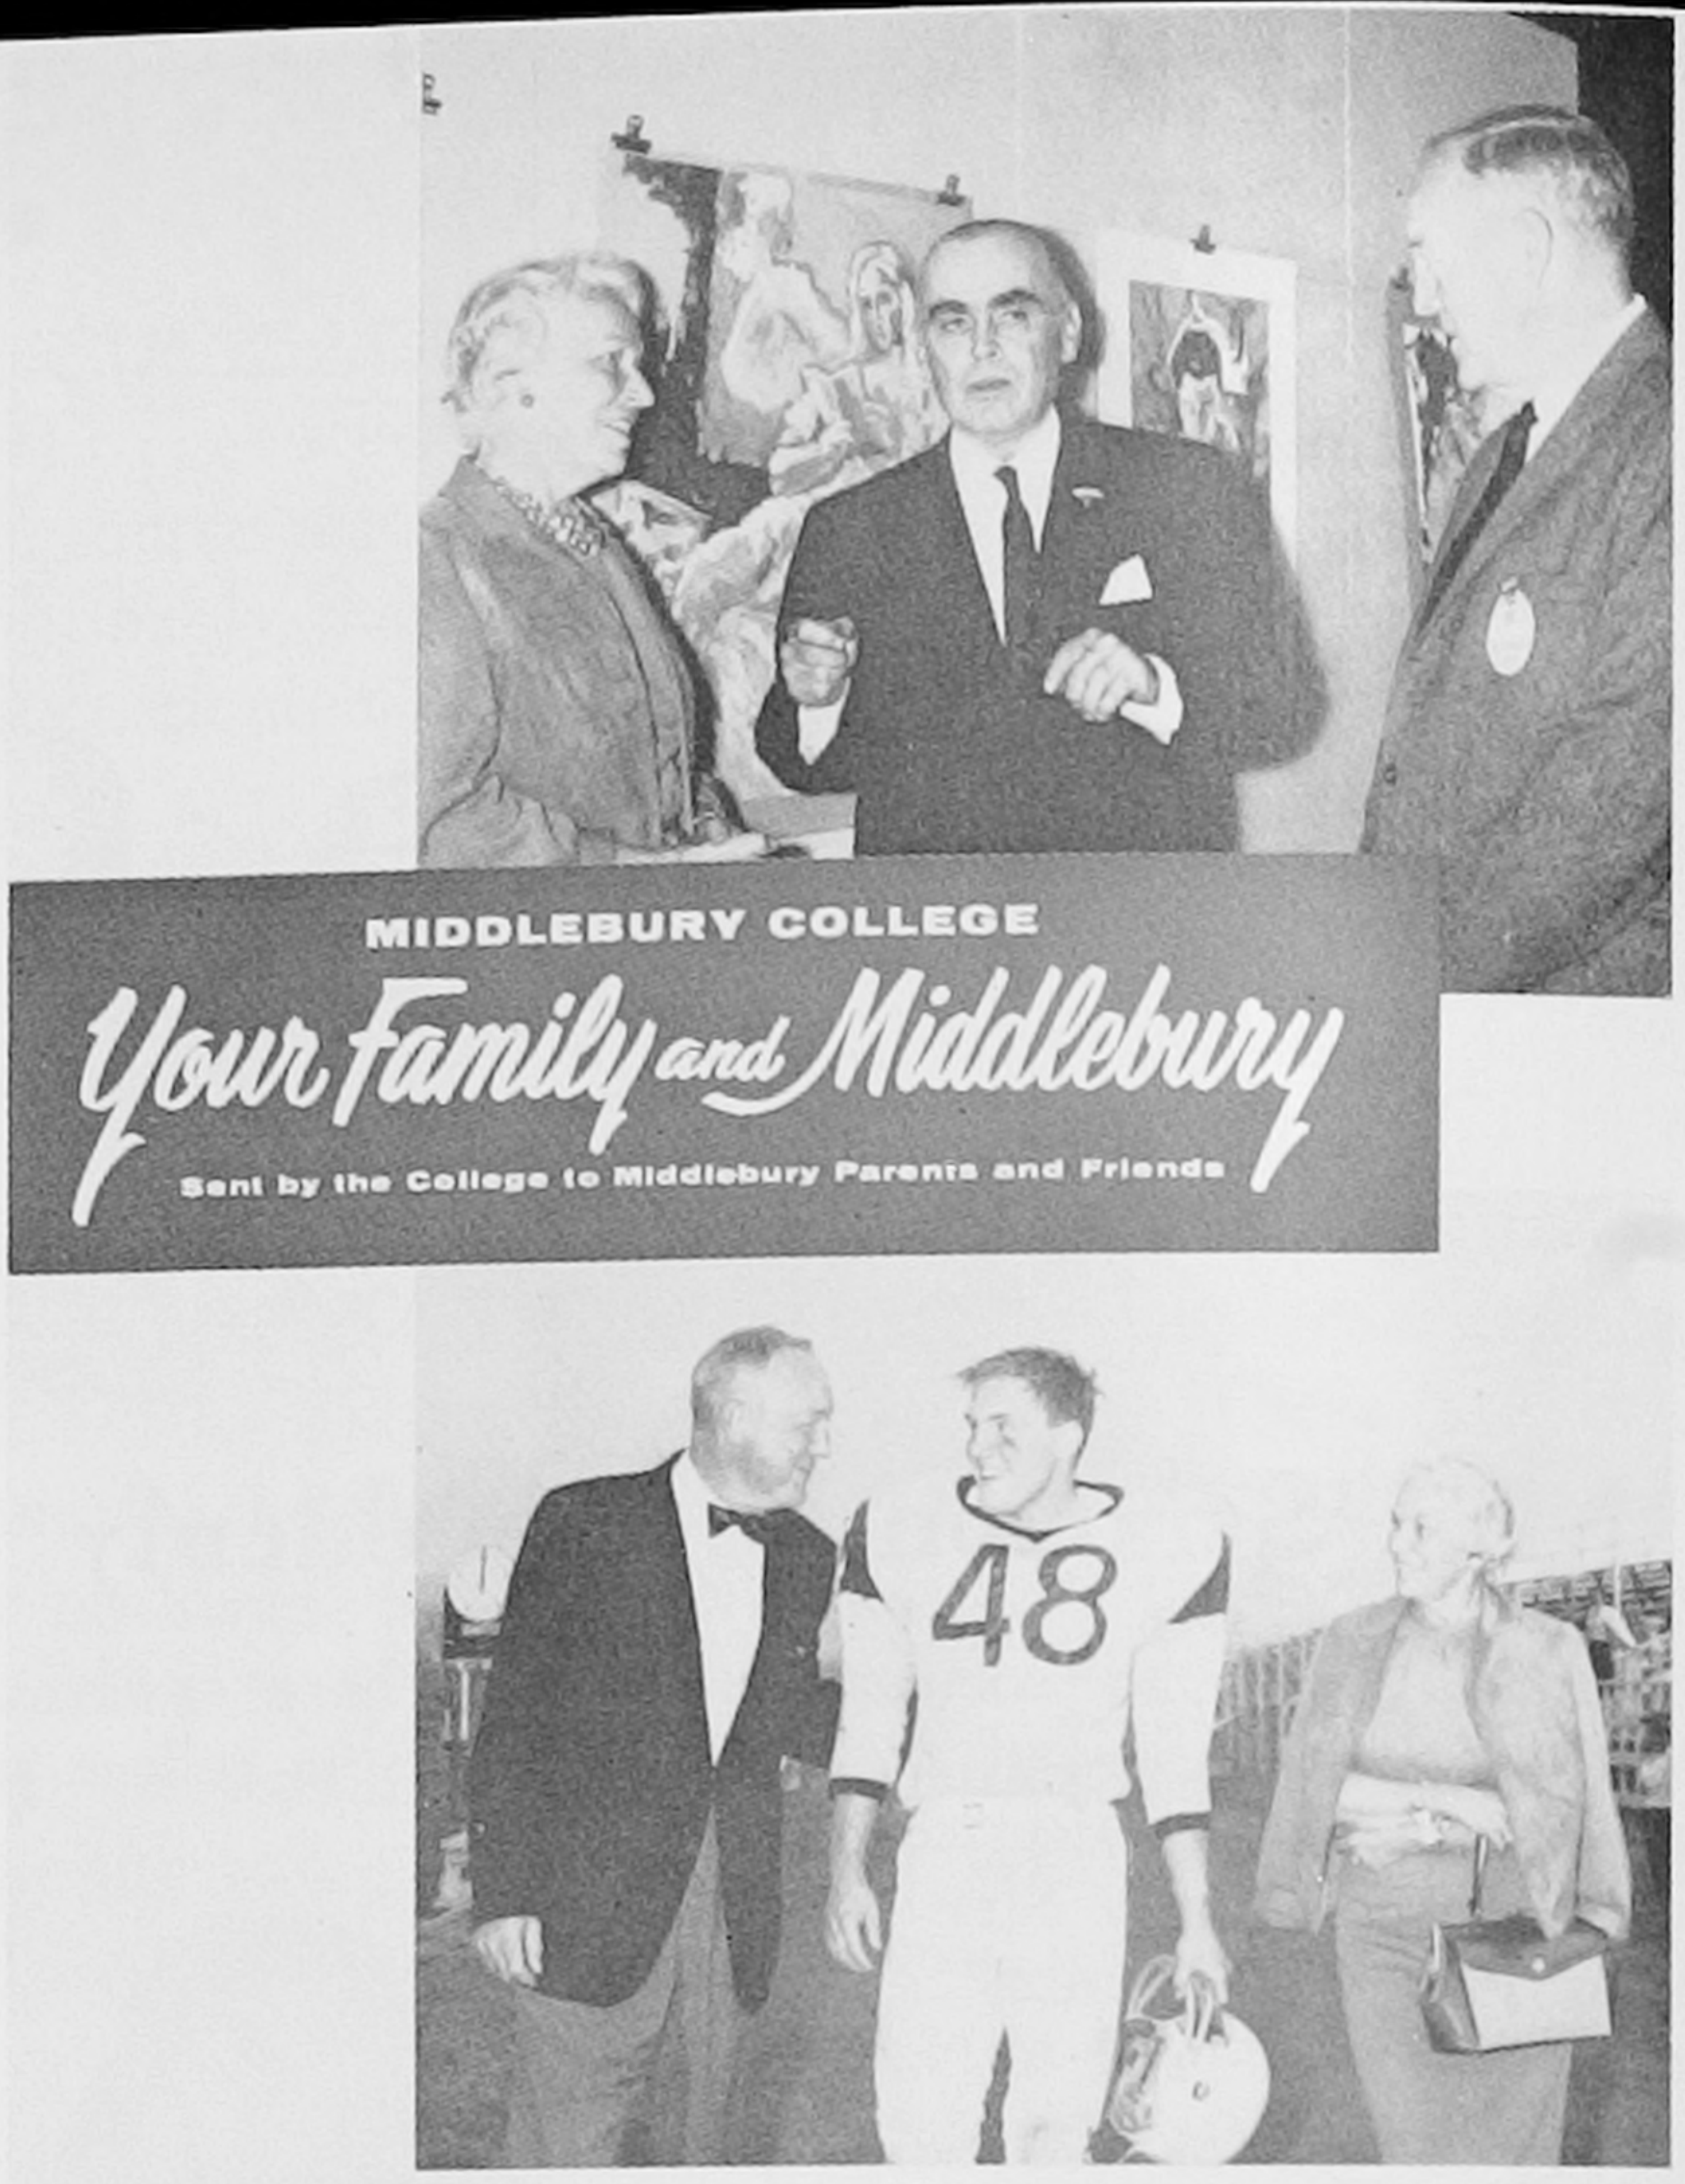
Winter Carnival, 1934-1964

Thirty years ago Middlebury College's first complete Winter Carnival conducted under the auspices of the Mountain Club was held with W. Wyman Smith, '35, chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements. The ski events were held on Chipman Hill, the skating events on the outdoor rink outside the McCullough Gymnasium, and the Old Town Hall Theatre was showing "The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi." Dartmouth won the intercollegiate ski meet, and Dorothy Gray and Philip Mathewson, both '35, reigned as the Carnival royalty.

It is now 1964 and Carnival is still a "big" weekend of the collegiate ski meet, and Dorothy Gray and Philip Mathewson, 21, 22), the Ice Show in the Memorial Field House, and a foreign picture will probably be showing at the Camous Theatre. Dartmouth will be in Middlebury for the ski meet, as will the daughter of the 1935 Carnival Queen, Mary Jocelyn, '64.

Carnival has come a long way in thirty years. This weekend has seen such great performers as Artie Shaw in 1937, Glenn Miller in 1939, and the Brothers Four in 1961, just to name a few. This year's performer, Dizzy Gillespie, can add his name to the list of Carnival entertainers. In thirty years Carnival has lost none of its inimitable flavor.—Jeff Sprigman, '64

Patricia Lynch, '64, and Lansing Hays, '64, co-chairmen of this year's 30th Annual Winter Carnival.



MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE
Your Family and Middlebury
Sent by the College to Middlebury Parents and Friends

The cover of the Fall Issue of the College's parents' magazine—"Your Family and Middlebury"—featured two alumni parents and their son. (Above) Professor Arthur K. D. Healy, '24, explains a picture to Mr. and Mrs. George Hinman of the Class of 1928 at an exhibit held in Carr Hall during Parents Weekend. (Below) Mr. and Mrs. Hinman greet their son George Jr., '67, a freshman halfback, following a freshman game with Amherst at Porter Field.

Middlebury Well Represented In Olympic Winter Games

Middlebury College will play an important role in the United States bid for honors in the 1964 Winter Olympics at Innsbruck, Austria. Six positions on the U.S. Olympic ski and hockey teams in both competitive and coaching roles are held by Middlebury men.

Robert Beattie, '55, is head coach of the Alpine team (see page 63). He is assisted by Don Henderson, '49, who teaches and coaches at the Holderness School. Both of these coaches skied for Middlebury in their undergraduate days.

Gordon Eaton, '65, will be competing in his second Olympics on the Alpine squad; Lt. John Bower, '63, and a star last year for the Panthers, will be skiing in Nordic combined competition; and, Peter Lahdenpera, '60, has been selected to compete on both the biatholon and special cross-country Olympic squads.

Middlebury will be represented on the Olympic hockey team by Dates Fryberger, '63, who was named for the second consecutive year to first team All-America honors as a senior last year.

Eaton, a competitor in the 1960 Olympic team, is an excellent performer in the downhill. He skied in Europe in 1962 as a member of the FIS team. Last year he was the North American downhill and slalom champion.

Bowker represented the United States last winter in the Nordic combined and was a member of the 1962 FIS team. Despite spending parts of two winters in Europe, he graduated with his class last June.

Lahdenpera skied on the biatholon squad in the 1960 Winter Olympics at Squaw Valley and was a member of 1962 FIS biatholon squad in Europe.

College Students and Public Concern

By Nevitt Sanford

Is today's college student a concerned citizen or an apathetic mouse?

During the 1950's the prevailing image of the college student portrayed a well-behaved and thoroughly unheroic young person. The same catch-phrases appeared again and again in diagnoses of campus life: "student apathy," "student conformity," "the quest for security," "no interest in politics."

Although such generalizations remain with us today, in recent years a differing opinion has been heard. The editors of Time and Life discovered a "conservative revival" on several campuses—evidence of political activism from a conservative stance. More recently, newspapers like the New York Times have linked the participation of college students in civil rights sit-ins to another sort of political activism, the "liberal" crusade. Among scholars, too, there are those who claim to identify among students a new "intellectual commitment" to public affairs.

Which portrait of the student is right? The answer is that both are right yet neither is right, because both are over-generalizations.

If one judges by the majority, it is quite fair to say that college students are politically passive. The Cornell Value Study, which surveyed the attitudes of 2,975 students in eleven universities, reported that undergraduates were, in general, "politically disinterested." The Cornell investigators made this survey in 1952, but there is little reason to believe that the statement would not hold today. A Brookings Institution report, just published, suggests that high school youths generally become less favorable to the idea of government service after they go to college.

Foreign comparisons confirm this general pattern of political and social uninterestedness. A survey of college students in ten countries found that a peculiar characteristic of most of the Americans was their accent on "privatism": the yen to seek a "rich, full life" for themselves and their families, to think in concrete and practical terms about the material benefits that the future might hold—all this while remaining relatively unconcerned about social problems. The Americans' attitude was in marked contrast with the outlook of students in Mexico, Egypt, and Bantu society, whose fondest hope—though often distorted by excessive emotionalism—was to contribute something to the community: to help raise the standard of living in their villages, or to help their countries in their struggles for national independence.

SO FAR, however, we have only been talking about the majority of American students. Co-existing with this majority is a small proportion of college students who are intensely and vocally interested in political issues. It is these individuals who have inspired reports of a general political revival on the American campus. (They constitute very much the minority—although I would guess from my own talks with students that the passive majority has become more friendly in recent years towards the few who champion political causes. By showing tolerance for the active few, many students assuage their own prickings of conscience about not becoming active themselves.)

Today's political minority is in no sense a new phenomenon. The "campus radicalism" of the early 1930's was largely a fiction derived from the activities of relative handfuls of students at a few highly visible institutions. This we know from recent studies of graduates from that era. Even in 1950, when McCarthyism had cowed many of their elders, a strong minority of Berkeley undergraduates signed a written protest against the requirement that their professors take a loyalty oath and disclaim any past connection with pro-Communist groups.

If political interest on the part of the minority is nothing new, neither is political apathy on the part of the majority. In World War II, a period when one would have expected a heightened sense of identification with the community, a survey of college attitudes showed that most students were cautious, conventional, uninvolved. The evidence of history, indeed, is that indifference about public affairs has dogged student life ever since the Civil War.

THE SITUATION is thus much the same as ever it was—and yet it is not the same. What has altered is the kind of political indifference, the kind of apathy about social issues, that some students show. On many campuses there can be seen a student type who a generation ago would have been a highly political rebel, but who today is almost fervently *a*political and *a*social. Where the old version showed social concern by vehemently criticizing existing institutions within society, the new type rejects society in toto. Or, rather, he tries to. One variant of this new type is the beatnik who, instead of rebelling, simply withdraws.

To account for this phenomenon we can point first to the students' family backgrounds. A predominant

Middlebury's Teacher Training Program

By Dr. Donald A. Campbell
Director of Teacher Training

Editor's Note: The Middlebury College Teacher Training Program was started in April, 1960 after study by the Educational Policy Committee developed a proposal that was approved by faculty and trustees. In 1960 a four year grant exceeding $100,000 was obtained from the Ford Foundation for the Program. "Progress Reports" about the Teacher Training Program have appeared in past issues of The News Letter. The following article discusses the accomplishments of the Program as noted by a follow-up study of graduates of the Teacher Training Program.

French specialist at the American Community School in Beirut? Tutoring the children in a touring dramatic troupe? Teaching English in a German gymnasium? Team teaching in Lexington, Massachusetts, and Westport, Connecticut? Or teaching in elementary and secondary schools in the city, the suburbs, or the country?

The graduates of the Teacher Training Program are doing, or have done, all these things, according to their responses on a follow-up questionnaire.

As one means of assessing the effectiveness of the training for teachers under the Ford Foundation supported Program at Middlebury, 93 graduates in the classes of 1961 and 1962 were asked for comments about their teaching and the relationships between it and their training. Seventy-three questionnaires, 79%, were returned. The message about Middlebury's efforts in teacher education contained in the graduates' answers clearly validates the premises underlying the faculty's creation of the Program in 1959.

At that time the faculty recommended that much of the content of education courses should be incorporated into regular academic courses, that the study of the problems of teaching should be concentrated into semester-long seminars, and that practice teaching should be revised in terms of assignment and supervision. It asserted further: "The College believes that the most desirable education for teachers emphasizes subject matter in preference to methods of teaching." Such a decision was boldly unique then; it now seems fairly commonplace in light of similar thinking about teacher training which has developed.

Part I of the questionnaire indicates a wide variety of professional experience and plans on the part of the graduates in the first two years of the Program:

1. Have you been teaching since graduation?
Of 73 responding, 54 are teaching, 74%

2. Have you taken any graduate courses since graduation?
34 out of 54 have taken at least one, 63%.

3. Do you plan to return to the same job next year:
23 out of 54 do, 43%.

4. What long-range plans do you have regarding your teaching career?

Obtain a Master's degree.	15
Have more or less definite plans to teach in the future.	44
Definitely disenchanted.	2

The second part of the questionnaire summarizes the value of the Teacher Training Program as reported by the participants. The tabulations which follow have some inconsistencies, because the graduates were encouraged to elaborate in their answers. Where categories are used, for example, they are the ones found in answers from more than a single respondent. In an effort to avoid suggesting any desired answers the questionnaire sinned on the side of subjectiveness and descriptiveness. Some of the individual comments cited below will show the thoughtfulness which resulted, however.

1. For which aspect of your teaching were you best prepared?

	Elementary	Secondary
Actual classroom work	9	18

Kerry Reilly, '62, spoke for most of those in secondary teaching when she said, "My teaching gave me the characteristic of modern parents is their failure to realize that love and reasonable authority can be combines. As a result the child, on feeling a natural desire to oppose his parents, can often find no authority to rebel against. His alternative is to withdraw, to comply outwardly with the gentle requests of his parents but to shut them out from an inner world of his own.

THE psychological effect of this pattern is reinforced at college. Here a host of requirements and examinations all too often induce the undergraduate to "think small," to concentrate on clearing each hurdle in an academic obstacle race rather than on thinking widely and imaginatively about the world around him. If he resents the system, to whom can he make an effective complaint? We, the professors, are frequently inaccessible to the student. Even more frequently, we are content merely to fill the student full of professional know-how. At the same time we decry the absence of creative enterprise among students—as if the absence wasn't our own fault.

AND YET it is not entirely our own fault. A feeling of individual helplessness is induced by certain factors in U.S. civilization as a whole.

First there is America's advanced state of industrialization. When a college student looks at our society's vast impersonal processes—and humbly asks himself where he can fit in—he is not simply being a conformist. Perhaps he is also being realistic; perhaps he sees that we live in a society which organizes intelligence ever more closely—a society where opportunities for individual initiative or for the exercise of talent on one's own terms have actually decreased.

Accompanying our advanced industrialization are the extraordinary phenomena of modern communication and modern standardization. These are not necessarily evil in themselves, but they have had one unhappy effect on college life: We no longer get those diamonds-in-the-rough who provided such joy for the teacher—those boys and girls from different traditions and backgrounds, "unspoiled" by more effete, modern ways but intelligent and eager, ready to shine under a teacher's devoted hand. Today the boy from the lower East Side and the girl from Chestnut Level arrive with relatively the same mannerisms and material baggage. It is harder, and much less interesting, to tell where a student comes from.

This uniformity, be it noted, is not primarily the result of any psychological need to conform. (I doubt that this need is essentially different from that found in students of 20 or 30 years ago.) Today's students simply live in a less differentiated society; there are fewer patterns with which to conform.

There is, also, the disappearance of the responsible individual in our society—his disappearance into a web of social roles and group memberships. Once we could identify stuffed shirts in high places and complain about them; now it appears that substituting a group image for the individual man is a major national trend. Instead of bad decisions by responsible officials, we have mediocre decisions by anonymous committees. Instead of leadership, we have administration. Instead of a Teapot Dome scandal, in which a few scoundrels lined their pockets at public expense, we have corporate immorality. Vast networks of functions are performed, and in the end an immoral effect is achieved; but we can find in such a network no individual to blame nor anyone who feels guilt.

ANOTHER factor in our civilization which inhibits political initiative is the Cold War. In the Cold War era, people feel they must not move lest something snap. But people cannot live in the condition of being constantly poised to run for cover. So, wishing for stability, it is easy to convince oneself that everything is fine and will stay that way. Students, at any rate, tend to see present arrangements in our society as likely to persist indefinitely, provided we all are not exterminated. It is easier to imagine extermination than to imagine social change. This is not a good climate for dedication to social reform.

GRANTING that the present phase may be due more to rigidity than to genuine stability, the contrasts with other recent periods of our history are nonetheless marked. We do not experience the mobility, the open-endedness, the excitement of wartime, or of a depression era, or of a jazz age. Correspondingly, there is relative quiet on the intellectual and ideological fronts.

In the early years of this century we had the movement toward greater freedom for women; in the twenties we had Freud and the revolution in morals; in the thirties we had the depression and social change; in the forties we had war, fervent democratic idealism, imaginative post-war plans. What are the big ideas of the present? The surly and automatic anti-communism of recent years has not been exactly inspiring. Efforts to bring about a return to religion, or to evolve a new religious outlook, have been feeble. One hears little intellectual discussion on the campus for the simple reason that there is not very much to discuss.

And in many of our leading institutions, there is no time for truly intellectual matters; the faculty and their recruits are preoccupied with their own little scientific and scholarly specialties.

Times will undoubtedly change, and new ideas will appear, but for the time being we are in the cultureal and intellectual doldrums. This I would set down as a major source of current lethargy. Not only are students not inspired by the scholarship in which their teachers willy-nilly participate; they (Please turn to page 70)

Steps Taken to Improve Language Facilities

The opening of Allen Hall (page 55), new Language Dormitory for Women, and the completion of plans for the Sunderland Language Center (page 54), testify to the importance of the study of foreign languages in the Middlebury curriculum and in the national interest.

Advance gifts are now being sought for the Language Center as the next most needed facility in Middlebury's Development Program. The Center will be located at the corner of College Street and Château Road, and will be the coordinated center of all activities of the Language Division, winter and summer.

Dr. Stephen A. Freeman, Vice President Emeritus and Director of the Language Schools, in a previous News Letter answered the question of some Alumni—"Why these new outlays? We thought Middlebury was doing all right in languages," He said: "Yes, Middlebury has a high reputation for language teaching. It was a pioneer nearly fifty years ago in the development of specialized schools and houses where the foreign language was taught and practiced as a means of oral communication. Middlebury has one of the oldest and still the largest French House in the country. Middlebury had one of the earliest language laboratories in the country. Middlebury has by far the largest summer language school. But the fact is that the rest of the country is rapidly catching up with Middlebury, and will soon surpass it if we do not act vigorously.

"This comes about because there has been in the last ten years a revolutionary change in the national attitude toward the study of modern languages, both with respect to its importance and to its objectives. Up until about 1940, in keeping with the generally isolationist atmosphere of our politics, the study of modern languages was declining seriously. The new theories of functional and progressive education tended to eliminate them; and in turn, the colleges were dropping their requirements of languages for admission and for degrees. Even more insidious was the growing acceptance, even in the profession, that two years of study was the normal course, and that all a pupil needed to do was to learn to read. Some knowledge of classical literature, discussed in English, was considered the adequate objective of a college course. For two decades, Middlebury stood nearly alone as the advocate of a mastery of a foreign language for oral communication.

"Then suddenly, World War II proved the need for the ability to understand and speak, and the Army Training Programs proved that it could be achieved by the proper intensive method. Still the country was slow in waking up; and in spite of many articles in the public press little was done until in 1952 the Modern Language Association launched its Foreign Language Program of investigation and reinvigoration. I am happy to have been a member of its Steering Committee from the start. Results soon began to show. The general public exerted pressure on schools and colleges. Three- and four-year high school courses, which had been dropped were revived. Within a three year period, fifteen major colleges including Middlebury reinstated a language requirement for the A.B. degree. Most noteworthy was the general insistence upon the need for an oral skill."

Today middlebury needs a new Language Center in order to exploit properly the new techniques in language teaching. In the new Sunderland Language Center, language will come alive to students through exciting, new audio-lingual methods in which reading and writing are preceded by hearing and speaking. The College needs the new facilities to stress properly the audio-lingual phases of the different languages taught at Middlebury.

Middlebury College pioneered in the teaching of modern languages by the methods and for the objectives now nationally recognized as the right ones. It must continue to pioneer and to maintain its position as a model and as a leader.

assurance and basic knowledge about the classroom that a new teacher must have." On the elementary side, Sally Lobban, '61, felt she was taught "a creative and democratic approach to teaching with allowance for individual variations."

Answers to question 2 tended to define the Program's limitations in terms of the individual's particular teaching situation.

3. How has your general education helped your teaching?

The various responses cannot be represented meaningfully in figures. All the students were convinced that their liberal arts background was a great asset to their teaching. Susan Sheridan, '61, thought it enriched teaching, creating a better image for parents, administrators, and students. "It has given me the ability to solve problems and to see relationships in my teaching," said Jacqueline Ross, '62. Those values cited most often were "increases self-confidence," "variety of approach," and "makes teaching easier and more enjoyable."

The Interviews

The gratifying responses about their preparation at Middlebury by the participants in the Program were substantiated from another vantage point. A complementary follow-up was carried out in the spring of 1963. Nine 1961 and 1962 graduates of the Teacher Training Program, randomly selected, were visited at their schools and their respective principals were interviewed. These interviews uniformly found favorably for the Middlebury product. An interesting secondary result, pointed out by the graduates, was a heightened morale and appreciation of the continuing interest of the College. Furthermore the principals took advantage of the visits to register needs for the coming year with the Middlebury Placement Office.

All of the principals were very pleased with the subject matter preparation of their Middlebury teachers, even in the two cases where the graduates had prepared for high school teaching but were teaching in elementary schools.

Skill in presentation of material was judged to be excellent for the majority of the graduates. In three cases, principals commented that the graduates sought and used advice from experienced teachers in regard to methods. In one case, early disciplinary problems are improving and the graduate has signed for a third year at the school.

Graduates were all praised for valuable contributions to extra-curricular activities and for professional maturity. They were well liked by the rest of the faculties.

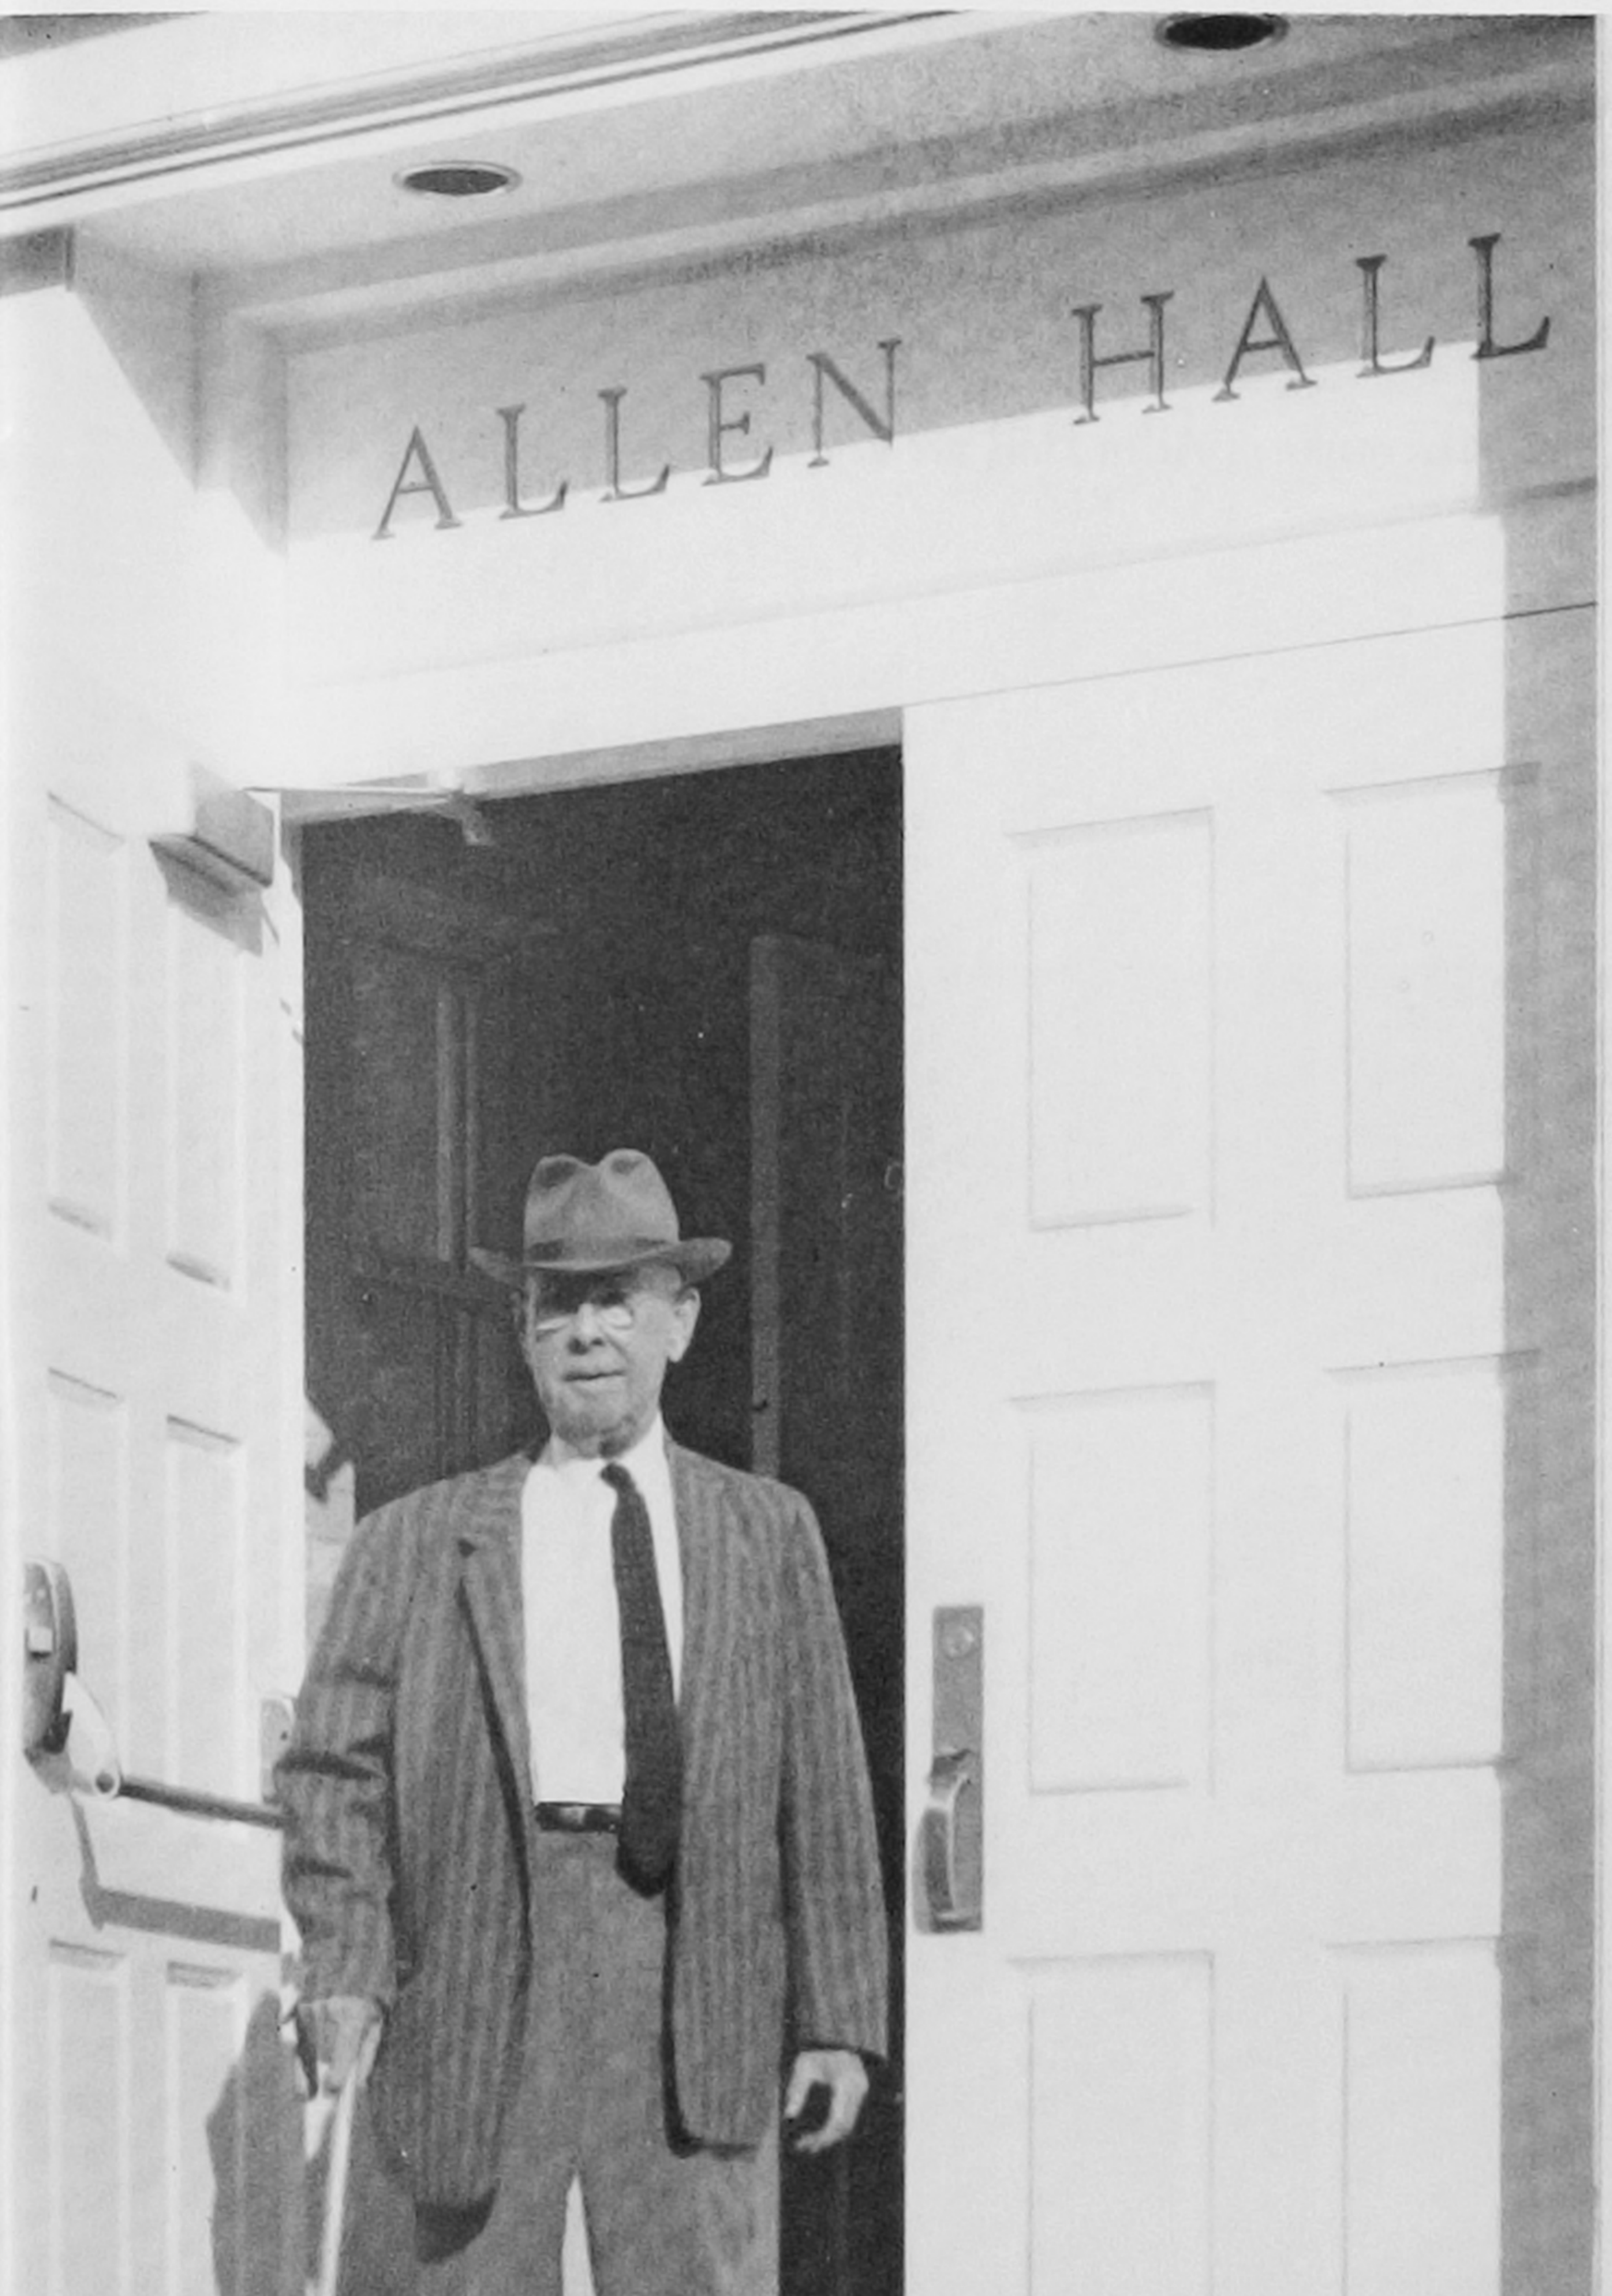
When asked how Middlebury Teacher Training graduates compare with other young teachers, the nine principals rated them this way:

Average
Above average
Very favorably
Strong
Very well pleased
Most capable
Outstanding
Extremely favorable
Very well, with administrative possibilities

Five principals expressed firm advocacy of strong liberal arts training. Three of them thought that teacher training courses do not have much bearing on whether a teacher is good or not. Several principals felt a need for more methods preparation generally. They did not say that our graduates needed more, however, because they were doing so well.

New Language Dormitory for Women Opens

Allen Hall Provides Facilities for "Living" Four Different Languages



ALLEN HALL, the College's new language dormitory for women, located to the northeast of the Château and in line with the Wright Memorial Theatre opened in the fall and is now doing in a very successful manner for other modern languages studied on the campus what the Château has done for French during the past thirty-eight years. It provides separate facilities for seventy students "living" four modern langusges. It replaced Casa Española and Deutsches Haus, and provides accomodations for a Russian House and another language. This latter area is now being used by English students, but future plans call for it to be utilized by students of another language.

Students living in Allen Hall are selected by the head of the language department in which they are studying. Each language has its own area, with separate entrances from a main lobby, separate lounge and study rooms, and its own apartment for a Directress. There is a large central lounge available for use by any of the "Houses" and here men students gather for conversations in the language being studied by the girls they are visiting.

All the rooms in Allen Hall are double, and the capacity for each language ranges from ten to twenty-six students. Doors and stairways are placed ingeniously to permit various combinations of space for greater flexibility of use, either in the academic year or during the summer session. There are no dining rooms and students eat at separate tables in other college dining halls.

George H. V. Allen, husband of Cecile Child Allen, '01, for whom the dormitory was named, pauses in the entrance of Allen Hall following his first visit to the building after its completion. Mr. Allen is an emeritus trustee and a generous benefactor of the College. Mrs. Allen died in 1936.

Plans Completed for New Language Center

Final plans for the Sunderland Language Center are being completed and advance gifts to help finance the construction of the Center are now being sought. As of late January over ten percent of the $800,000 needed for this project was on hand from gifts and pledges as follows:

Gifts
Alumni (3)	$18,337.50
Parents (2)	635.06
Other individuals (10)	22,846.26
Foundations (5)	11,600.00
Corporations (10)	13,650.00

United States Trust Company

Total Gifts	$67,068.82
Pledged for Project	20,000.00
Grand Total	87,068.82

A Late News Development

As The News Letter goes to press word has been received of a conditional grant of $300,000 for the Sunderland Language Center from the Charles A. Dana Foundation, Inc. To qualify for this grant Middlebury must raise the balance of $500,000 needed for the project by gifts from Alumni, parents, friends and other sources.

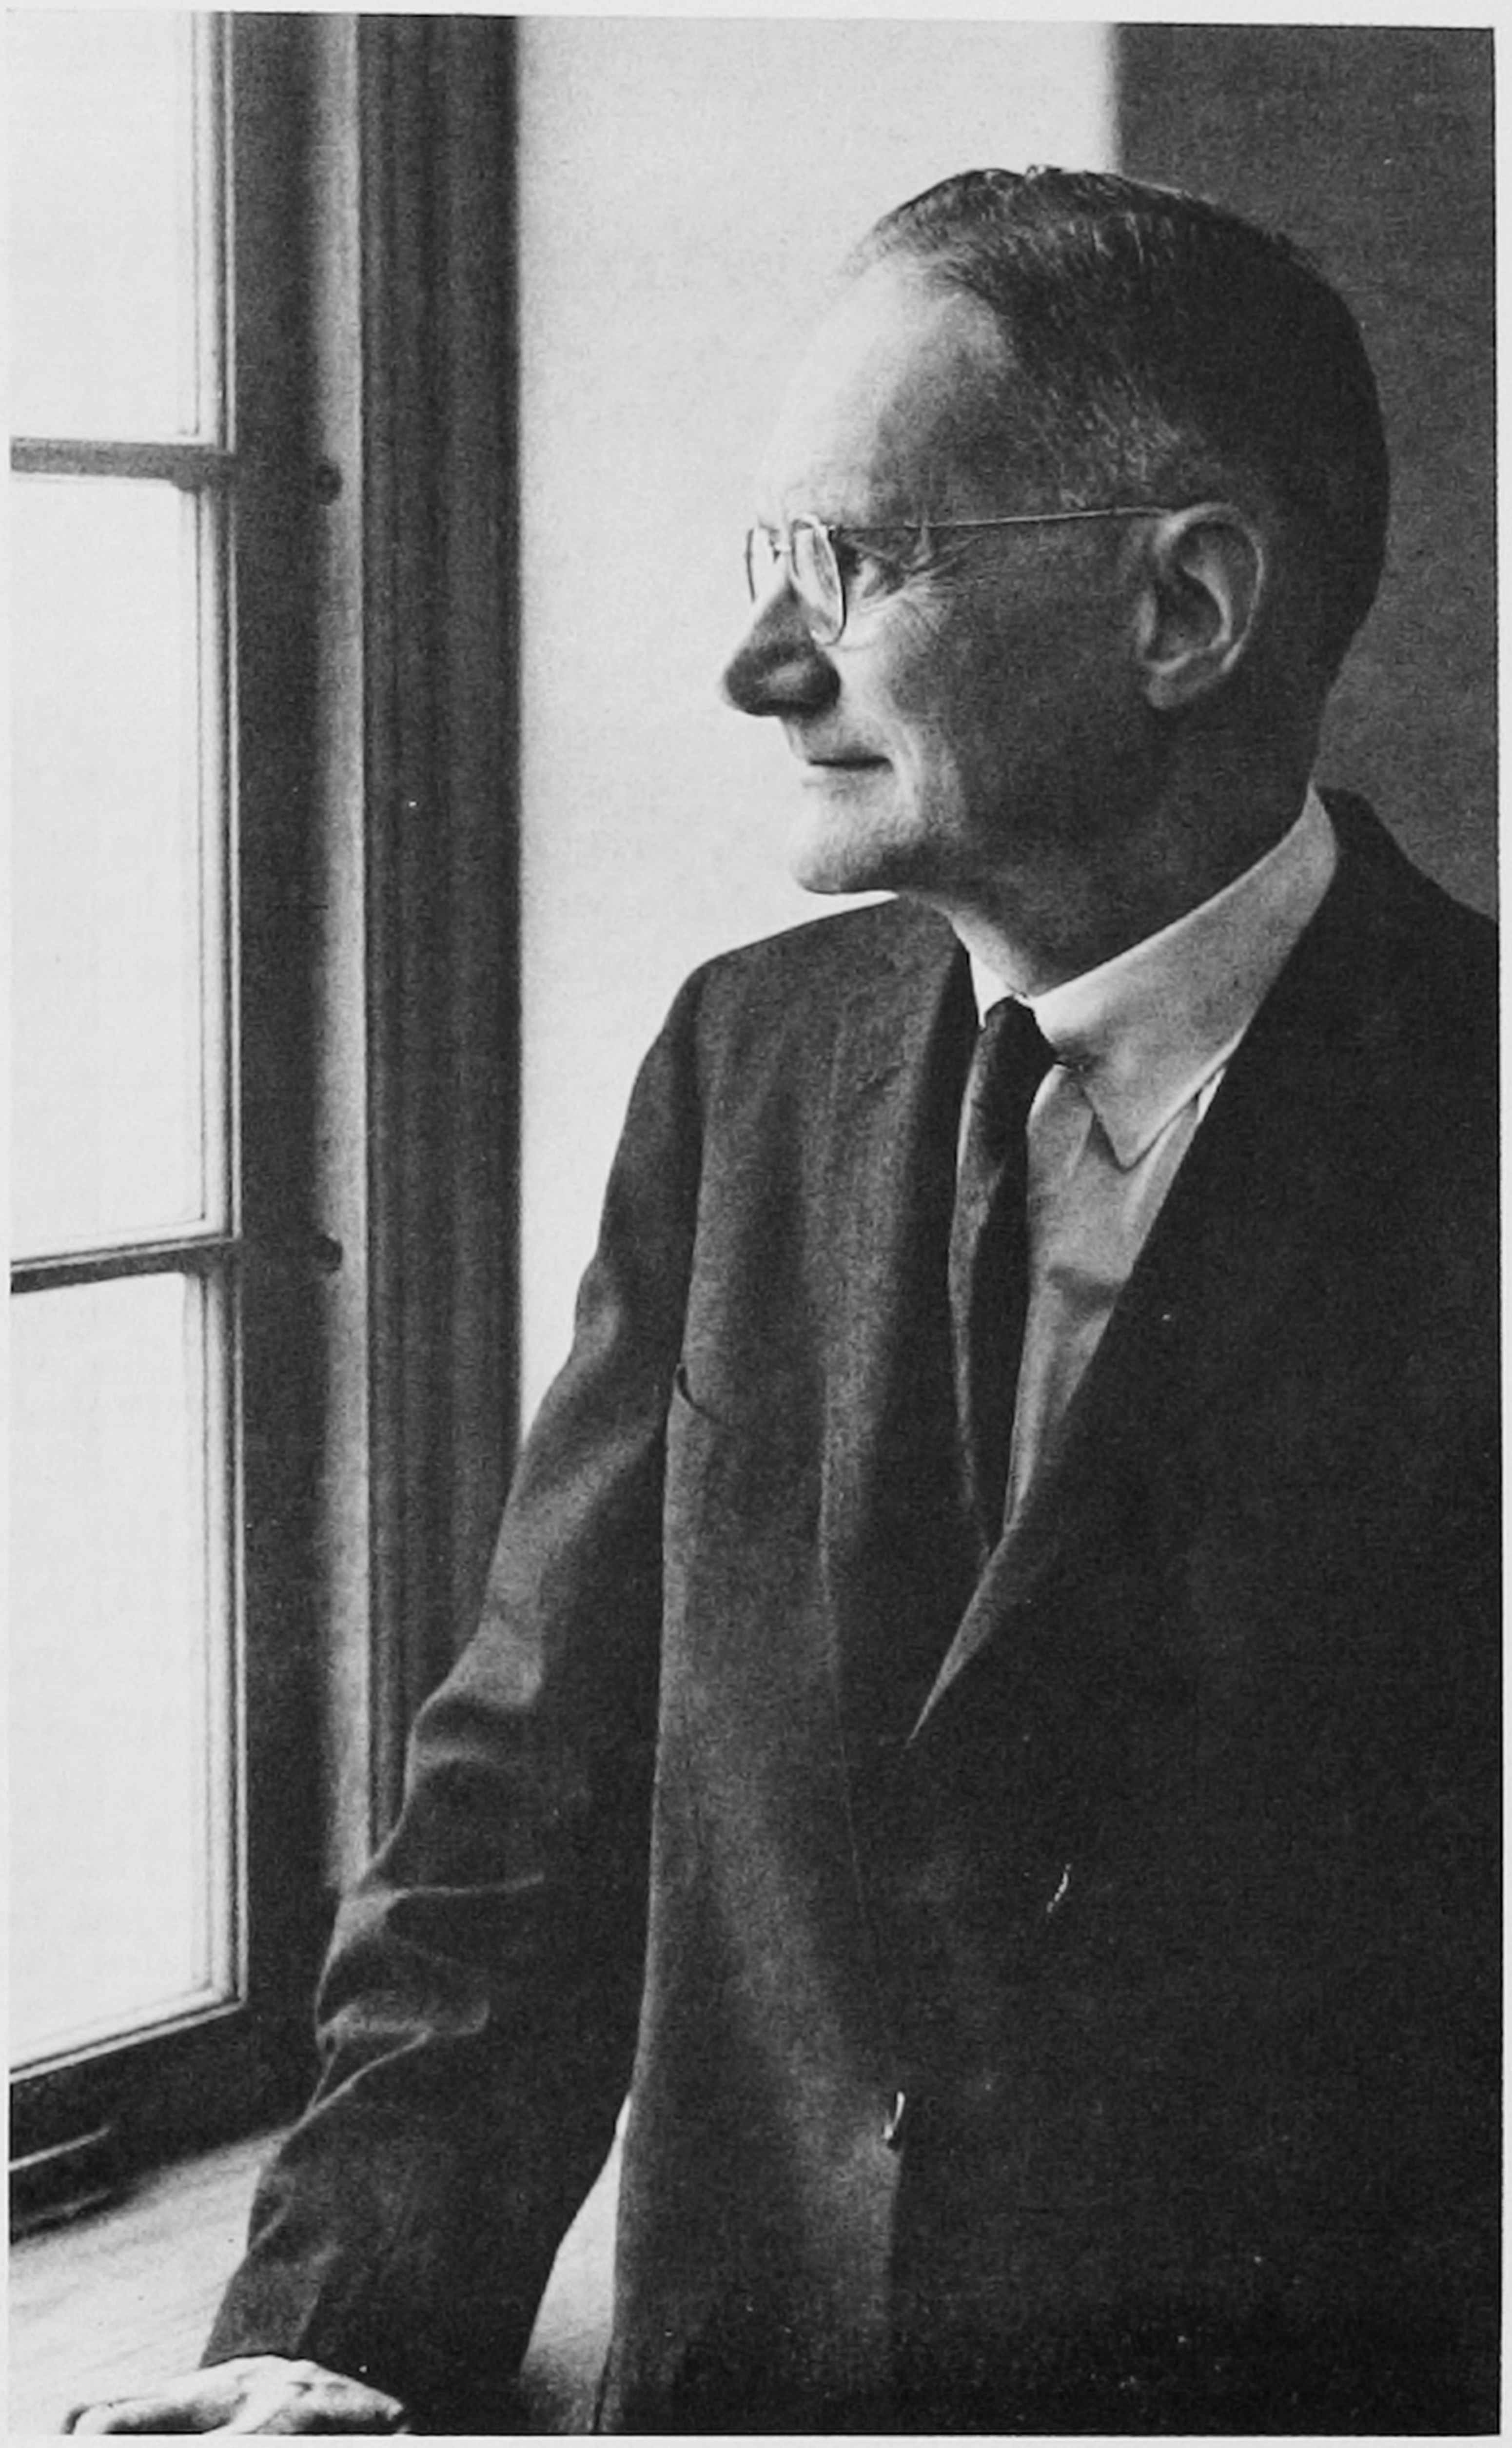
Middlebury's Long-Time Faculty



Donald H. Ballou

Donald H. Ballou, chairman of the College's Mathematics Department, is regarded by students and colleagues as one of the ablest members of the faculty. Students appreciate the patent genuineness of his interest in the progress of their studies. His aim in teaching has been to try to impart interest and enthusiasm for learning in general and for mathematics in particular. There has also been the effort on Dr. Ballou's part to promote systematic and logical thinking through participation in the discipline of mathematics. He has tried to accomplish these aims by presenting mathematics with clarity and precision in the classroom and by making himself available for conference outside.

A native Vermonter, Dr. Ballou received his higher education at Yale and Harvard. At Yale he received honors in his major of English and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year. From 1931 to 1934 he studied and taught at Harvard where he received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees.

Before coming to Middlebury in 1942 he was a member of the faculty of Georgia Institute of Technology for eight years. His first assignment at Middlebury was assistant professor for the special science session in the summer of 1942. Dr. Ballou became chairman of the Mathematics Department in 1954, and two years later was appointed a full professor. He was visiting associate professor at Yale, 1951–52, as a Carnegie Fellow in the Program in General Education, and is co-author of texts in "Plane and Spherical Trigonometry" and "Analytic Geometry."

Professor John G. Bowker, former head of the Mathematics Department and Dean of the Faculty, commenting on Dr. Ballou's twenty-one years at Middlebury College said:

"Dr. Ballou joined our faculty just after America's entrance into World War II at a time of great uncertainty as to the war-time demands upon instruction in the basic sciences. Professor Llewellyn Perkins had been forced to retire the year before because of ill health and I well recall the enthusiasm with which Professor Hazeltine and I greeted our new colleague. After several years experience as a teacher in the large department at Georgia Tech, Don's assistance and advice proved invaluable to us as we struggled with war-time adjustments. From a norm of three men teaching eleven to thirteen classes we were suddenly confronted with an expansion to eleven men teaching thirty classes when the Navy unit arrived on Campus.

"With a return to normalcy Professor Ballou was early recognized as an excellent teacher and a reliable source of well-informed opinion on all issues of faculty concern. Among the students he enjoys high praise for his patience and for his precise and thorough methods of teaching difficult subject matter. For two years he led the faculty skillfully as chairman of the Educational Policy Committee in its attempts to define the essential properties of a freshman course in a liberal arts curriculum. He has been nominated repeatedly for the Faculty Council and is serving on the senior group of that body at the present time. Under Professor Ballou's alert and competent chairmanship since 1954 the Mathematics Department has met the many challenges of this age of science as evidenced by his new course this past fall in computer mathematics."

With the Middlebury Alumnae Clubs

By Constance Sherman Patrick, '53

Contributions from three of the nineteen Middlebury alumnae groups have been received by the Alumnae Association and turned over to the President's Purse for use at the discretion of President Armstrong in the best interests of the College. Leading the way toward the successful accomplishment of the goal to raise at least $1,500 for this purpose were alumnae in Washington, D. C.; Cape Cod, Massachusetts, and Chicago, Illinois. Contributions from individual alumnae have also been received for this use.

Chicago area alumnae gathered at the home of Mary-Louise McLeod Aagaard, '52 (Mrs. James S.) in Evanston on October 29 to meet with Miss F. Janise Gabbie, '63, Assistant Director of Admissions for Women at Middlebury. At a second meeting on November 23 at the home of Hilda Woodruff Gollnick, '22 (Mrs. Albert F.), new officers of the group were elected. They are: Barbara Counsell Atwood, '43 (Mrs. Norman R.), president; Carol Jennings, '55, vice-president; and Mrs. Aagaard, secretary-treasurer.

Since the initial announcement of the alumnae clubs' programs, several more clubs have completed plans for their programs for the current year 1963–64. Mary-Jean Burr Sylvia, '52 (Mrs. Douglas W.), president of the Boston Middlebury Alumnae Association, announces a program of three more events in addition to a series of regional meetings completed in October–November and continuing in January–February. On April 25, the Annual Meeting will take place at the Wayside Inn in Sudbury. Further details may be obtained from Phyllis Hackley Foote, '47 (Mrs. Harrison D.) of West Acton, Massachusetts, chairman. In May, the group will sponsor "Middlebury Night at the Pops," Cornelia Frohman Santomenna, '56 (Mrs. Robert C.), chairman. A tea honoring Middlebury's entering freshman women will be given in June. Details of the regional meetings may be obtained from the Regional Co-chairmen, Yvonne Mase Pierce, '49 (Mrs. E. Blake) of Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts or Isabel Handy Ross, '37 (Mrs. Donald G.) of Auburndale, Massachusetts.

The Boston Middlebury Alumnae Association has given to Middlebury College $475 for scholarship aid for women.

The Rochester (N. Y.) Middlebury alumnae group have held three meetings this Fall and plan four more in the Winter and Spring of 1964. On January 28, alumnae will meet at the home of Paula Loughran Zahniser, '52 (Mrs. Frank) at 130 Sylvania Road in Rochester to hear a lecture on the "International Home Economics Conference in Paris, 1963." Margaret Zornow Thomas, '57 (Mrs. Donald) will be hostess to the group on February 26 in her home at 9 Washington Road in Pittsford. A guest lecturer will discuss "Ways of Looking at Paintings." Dr. Stephen A. Freeman, Director of the Language Schools at Middlebury, and Mrs. Freeman will bring news of their "Sojourn in Latin America" to the group on March 19 in the home of Virginia Knudsen Allen, '48 (Mrs. John), 55 Reitz Pkwy. in Pittsford. The Annual Meeting of the group will be held on May 12. Ruth Durland Fyfe, '49 (Mrs. S. Bruce) of 16 Tall Acres Drive in Pittsford will be the hostess.

Lois Tyson Vetare, '52 (Mrs. Ferdinand) announces plans for the fifth annual Winter Cocktail Party sponsored by the Westchester Middlebury Alumnae Club on Sunday, March 15, 1964 from 3–7 p.m. at the Hilton Inn, 455 South Broadway, Tarrytown, New York.

Candidates for National Office In the Alumnae Association

At the annual meeting of the Middlebury Alumnae Association in June, 1963, a revision in the By-laws of that organization was made changing the election procedure for its national officers. In accordance with this new election procedure, the Nominating Committee, headed by Virginia Phillips Whitney, '36, takes pleasure in presenting a single slate of candidates for the national offices of President and Delegate-at-Large each to serve for a two-year term. Additional nominations may be made by petition, signed by ten members in good standing and filed with the Alumnae Secretary by April 1, 1964. In the event of a contest, the complete slate shall be mailed to all active members of the Association by May 1, 1964. If there is no contest, the candidates shall be elected by voice vote at the annual meeting in June.

For President of the Middlebury Alumnae Association:

Mary Williams Brackett, '36, born Bellows Falls, Vermont; prepared for college at Bellows Falls High School; A. B., Middlebury, 1936, elected to Phi Beta Kappa, M. A., Middlebury, 1939, Ph.D. in Germanic Philology, Stanford University, 1949. Teacher in Eaton, New York, 1936–37; Assistant in German at Middlebury, 1938–39; Director of Admissions for Women, Middlebury, 1939–44; Dean of Women, Middlebury, 1944–45; Instructor in German Language Department, Stanford University, 1946–49; Assistant Professor of German at Stanford University, 1949–52. Married Anthony G. L. Brackett, '33, 1952. Assistant Professor and Co-ordinator of Foreign Language Instruction at Brandeis University until September, 1962; presently a student counselor at Norwalk (Ct.) Community College. Office holder and Alumnae Council representative of the Boston Middlebury Alumnae Association, 1952–60; member of the Finance Committee of the Middlebury Alumnae Association, 1959–62, chairman, 1961–62; currently a member of the Eleanor S. Ross Scholarship Award Committee of the Alumnae Association. Address: 19 Cherry Lane; Wilton, Connecticut.

For Delegate-at-Large of the Middlebury Alumnae Association:

Dorothy Laux O'Brien, '45, born Mount Vernon, New York; prepared for college at the A. B. Davis High School in Mt. Vernon; A. B. Middlebury, 1945, elected to Phi Beta Kappa, attended Louisiana State University Graduate School of Journalism, 1945–46. Assistant in Mount Holyoke Press Bureau, 1946–47; Advertising copywriter for Gimbel Bros., New York, 1949–52. Married John M. O'Brien in 1952. Office holder and Alumnae Council representative of Westchester Middlebury Alumnae Association, 1948–61; member of Finance Committee of the Middlebury Alumnae Association 1960–63, chairman, 1962–63; currently a member of the Special Nominating Committee for Alumnae Trustee.

When the IX Olympic Winter Games open in late January at Innsbruck, Austria, the United States men's ski teams will be making its most resolute bid ever to walk away with at least one medal.

Without question, this 1964 American team will be the best conditioned, both physically and mentally, for the challenge that will confront them. Much of the credit for this circumstance belongs to Bob Beattie, who as head coach of the United States alpine team, initiated, and carried out, the longest and most intensive training program that American skiers ever experienced.

In seven seasons Bob produced two national collegiate championship teams and three runners-up at the University of Colorado where he is ski coach. And in his first experience at coaching in international competition, he headed a U.S. alpine team that took thirteen places in the 1962 World Championships at Chamonix, France. Bob has held the reins of the United States ski team since then. He adopted a farsighted program, directing a training camp for potential Olympians.

New Pomalift Installed in College Snow Bowl

The Middlebury College Snow Bowl has a new 1,800 foot Pomalift which has nearly doubled the uphill capacity of the area and opened a new trail. This second Pomalift is built just east of the Worth Mountain Trail in the new Battell Area to be utilized for beginner and intermediate skiers. A 200 foot wide slope has been carved through the spruce forest that covers the new section.

The Model B-50 Poma is designed to transport 1,000 skiers an hour up a twenty-six percent grade with a vertical rise of 406 feet. Seventy-five hangers travel on a five-eighth inch cable from the base terminal past six towers to the top of the slope.

The new lift supplements the Pomalift installed in 1954 which lifts the skier 3,185 feet up the mountainside in the Worth Mountain Area.

Located in the 120-inch snow belt, the Snow Bowl is specially designed to cover the full range of skiing. Its trails and open slopes and expert ski school instructions are matched to each skier's level of ability, encouraging development of confidence with progress and always offering further challenges. In addition to the two Pomalifts and rope tows for ski school and novice slopes, there is the new Neil Starr Shelter (see back cover) which contains a student library, language booths, study room, cafeteria, and an expansive sun deck.

are put to sleep by it.

But undoubtedly the most serious effect of the Cold War has been moral deterioration in our national life. Thomas Mann, I think, was the first to say that the worst thing about totalitarianism was that it forced its opponents to imitate its methods. Over the years, a gradual identification with the enemy has been taking place. Loud voices in this country have been demanding that we ought to fight fire with fire. Any means are justified, so long as they are believed to contribute to the defeat of communism. Control of the press, the manufacture of opinion, the manipulation of people in the interests of some temporary strategy, the acceptance of brutality as an ordinary part of modern life: these have become common in high places. Almost any national plan for reducing international tensions is immediately labeled "soft on communism"; almost any plan for improving our national life is condemned as "socialistic." When some thoughts cannot be allowed, all thinking tends to deteriorate in quality; myths and stereotypes flourish; and wishful or fearful ruminations take the place of realistic attacks on problems. In short, the country is brought to a state in which thinking itself is impaired.

STUDENTS DIFFER, of course, in their response to the present state of affairs. Many never become aware of the situation in the larger society. Liberal education fails to reach them and they never enter the phase of social criticism. Stuck with beliefs and values automatically accepted long before they entered college, they go on to become unthinking cogs in the social machinery. Others take a hard look at their society and decide it is not for them; instead of actively rebelling, they refuse to become involved. Still others, perhaps the largest group, see the situation well enough and decide to "play it cool." To make sure that they find a comfortable place in the world, they become respectable professional people; but they keep certain reservations about society to themselves and may even promise themselves to take a hand later on. Finally, there is the minority who take action now.

Perhaps things are not as bad as I have suggested. We may take hope from the fact that, when corruption or folly is revealed in high places, there are a great many people who are still capable of being shocked. And when something imaginative and positive, like the Peace Corps, is put forward, the response is most encouraging.

It is here that teachers have a crucial role to play. No one is in a better position than they to think about our goals and to represent the best in our traditions. They can strive to understand the situation of students, and to tell the truth to the young. Whether they desire it or not, they are bound to serve as models for the young, who will be guided not so much by what their teachers say as by what their teachers are.
